British Rulers End History-Making Visit

House Kills Plan to Raise U.S. Share of Age Pensions

Colmer Amendment Defeated by 174-97 Teller Vote; Party Lines Are Ignored

Disregarding party lines, the House supported the Administration yesterday in voting down a proposal of Representative Colmer (Democrat), of Mississippi, that the Federal Government greatly increase its rate of contributions to States for old age assistance.

The Colmer amendment, defeated by a teller vote of 174 to 97, provided that for every dollar that the States appropriated for the needy aged, the Federal Government would grant $4, up to a total of $20. Present law imposes a dollar-for-dollar matching obligation on the Federal Government, up to $15.

The Administration was saved from defeat at the hands of pension-minded Democrats, many of whom are 100 per cent New Dealers, by failure of the Republicans to indorse the Colmer plan. One leader in the fight for a 4-to-1 matching basis complained that although "50 or 60" Republicans had promised to support the amendment, only 8 finally voted "yes."

Increase Seems Sure

A pending amendment to the social security law, which seems certain of adoption, would raise the maximum Federal contribution to $20 from the present $15 limit, but would retain the 50-50 matching arrangement with the States. This concession to bigger-pension advocates has been denounced as "hypocritical" by proponents of the Colmer plan, on the grounds that only one State has thus far been able to afford even the $15 contribution.

Debate on the Colmer proposal and on a series of modifications, all of which were defeated, found Democrats opposing each other, Republicans supporting "economy-minded" Democrats and Democrats supporting Republicans.

Representative Disney (Democrat), of Oklahoma, declared that Arthur J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board, had estimated that Colmer's "four-to-one" plan would cost the Federal Government $417,000,000 annually.

"Blunders," Says Doughton

The amendments proposed by Colmer and his allies were branded as "serious, regrettable and major blunders" by Chairman Doughton of the Ways and Means Committee. He alleged that they were an attempt to bring in through the back door the Townsend old-age pension plan disapproved by the House last week.

When the House quit for the day it had finished reading exactly half the proposed bill, with every prospect that the measure would be passed today. In addition to raising the maximum Federal contributions, the bill advances from 1942 to 1940 the date for beginning old-age pension payments, and freezes pay-roll taxes.

A King's Silent Tribute at Tomb of Unknown Soldier

Card on Tomb of Washington Bears Legend: 'George R. I.'

Roosevelt Escorts Monarch on Trip To Mount Vernon; Head Gardener Presents Flowers Grown on Grounds

By Scott Hart

With no spoken word, without any music but the piping of bob whites down the hill, an English King yesterday strode through the ivy-curtained doorway to the stone sarcophagus of George Washington and placed a wreath of white lilies, iris, carnations and magnolia leaves. His card was attached to the wreath. It was inscribed "George R. I. and Elizabeth R."

His Majesty's movements were without hesitation and his face without expression. The muscles flexed about his mouth when he strode from the gate that protects the simple red-brick tomb.

His mind seemed distant from the scene, or deeply within it, and from this he looked startled when the cameramen's flashes found him. He appeared to spring from his mood, as he glanced fleetingly at the cameramen perched on a tier of stands in front of the tomb.

Then he made one quick whisper to the Queen, who stood nearby chatting with Mrs. Roosevelt. His words were too low to hear, but instantly the Queen lowered her famous white parasol with the green lining.

The photographers found her face then. The King turned abruptly and stood on the right of Mr. Roosevelt. Neither spoke for a full minute, and the incessant flashes from the cameramen's bulbs lighted the dark patches of ivy on the tomb and the creaking of newsreels undertoned the flutings of the bob whites down the hill.

It was very still, and very solemn—the King just standing there, a slight quiet figure, his eyes gone distant again, into himself, into the rolling greenery of the Mount Vernon landscape or into history that starts at the big white house on the hill overlooking the slow river.

Mr. Roosevelt's right hand flashed up as a guide's hand would flash, "now on my right!" The hand indicated the chiseled inscription above the gate of the tomb:

"Within This Enclosure Rests the

Pretty Hot, Says King; Weatherman Corrects Him

Although King George VI made special comment on the heat yesterday during his visit to Mount Vernon, the Weather Bureau reported it was six degrees cooler than Thursday, when the royal party arrived.

Only one person collapsed from the heat during the various ceremonies for Their Majesties. An unidentified woman was felled at Arlington National Cemetery and was given first aid at an Army tent. Two other women were treated for slight injuries when they stumbled and fell.

Motorboat Blast Hurls Three Overboard; 4 Suffer Burns

Three persons were rescued from the Washington Airport Basin and four were taken to Emergency Hospital with painful burns last night after a cabin cruiser exploded and caught fire at the airport dock.

The explosion occurred when the motor was started. Its force threw three of the six passengers into the basin. As the boat began to blaze those remaining clambered to the dock.

W. E. King and George Engroff, employes of the boathouse, jumped into the river and hauled ashore the persons catapulted overboard. Flames on the boat were subdued with a hand extinguisher and a small hose.

The four injured persons were given first aid and taken to Emergency Hospital by a volunteer fireman of Arlington. They were Harry Franck, 37, of Baltimore; Mildred Koch, 27, of Baltimore; Harvey Clayer, 42, of South Washington, Va., and Florence Franck, 35, of Baltimore.

Police 'Stall' Royalty With Detour When President Is Tardy

By Alfred Friendly

The King and Queen were taken for an extra 14-block ride yesterday, because President Roosevelt was 20 minutes late for their scheduled meeting at the Washington Navy Yard.

After the Congressional reception, the royal couple was to go immediately to the Navy Yard, where President Roosevelt was to greet Their Majesties.

At Second street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast Capt. Milton D. Smith, Traffic Bureau, in charge of the royal cavalcade, went into a hurried conference with Secret Service men. The President had not arrived.

Afraid to halt the procession, the chauffeurs were instructed to drive as slowly as possible. At Pennsylvania avenue and Eighth street southeast, the point where the procession was to make a right turn, President Roosevelt still had not arrived.

Unaware anything was amiss, the royal couple was driven to Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast, the cars made a "U" turn and returned to Eighth street, to follow the President, who arrived while the police were "stalling the show."

Compliments for Queen Elizabeth fell fast and frequently from the lips of American admirers, who commented on her smile, her eyes, her complexion, her hair, but mostly her graceful walk. Yesterday, as she climbed the Capitol steps and came floating down again to glide along an aisle between spectators' seats, women whispered, "Nobody in Hollywood can walk like that."

The "saddest words of tongue or pen" were uttered by Jeremiah O'Sullivan, 4221 Seventh street northwest, yesterday afternoon when the family attic finally yielded up medals he had won in the Boer War. They established his right to an audience with Their Majesties—but eight hours too late.

9,000 Witness Double Ceremonies at Arlington; Bows in Silent Prayer for American Soldier Who Fell in France

By Gerald G. Gross

His head bowed before the gleaming marble symbol of America's war dead, King George VI placed a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier yesterday in the final public ceremony of his stay in Washington.

In the presence of the Queen, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, Cabinet members and some 1,500 plain spectators near the tomb, the sovereign walked not in pomp as he stepped forward to the cenotaph but in sympathetic understanding of the former serviceman who knows the horrors of war.

The rites were impressive, but brief. Within 20 minutes after the King stepped out of the car at the amphitheater in Arlington National Cemetery, the ceremonies had been completed both at the tomb and the Canadian Cross and the royal party was on its way back to the White House.

Salute Signals Arrival

Firing of a 21-gun salute at 3:15 p. m. signaled entrance of the royal party into the cemetery. A few minutes later Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, and Lady Lindsay, Cabinet members and their wives, diplomatic representatives of the British dominions and other members of the reception party walked down the east steps of the amphitheater and took positions at the base of the steps, facing the tomb.

Meantime, cars bearing Their Majesties, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt and their aides had drawn to a stop at the north edge of the tomb plaza.

Gen. Malin Craig, Army chief of staff, stepped forward to greet King George as he left the car. Brig. Gen. Maxwell Murray, commanding officer of the Washington Provisional Brigade, which had charge of the rites, escorted Queen Elizabeth and Mrs. Roosevelt.

It was extremely hot on the sun-baked concrete walk as the party stood at rigid attention while the

Irish Terrorists Blamed for 17 English Bombings

By International News Service.

London, June 9.—A wave of at least 17 postoffice and mailbox bombings, including four at Birmingham, where Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain was delivering a speech, tonight marked what police termed a revival of the illegal Irish Republican Army's terroristic campaign against England.

Seven persons were injured in the explosions which brought police reinforcements into action and provoked a fresh hunt for Irish Republican Army terrorists. The blasts occurred in London, Manchester and Lincoln, as well as in Birmingham.

Rulers Get an Inside View At Tea on How New Deal Works

By Hope Ridings Miller.

King George and Queen Elizabeth learned about social and economic activities of the Administration yesterday afternoon at an informal tea at the White House.

Invited to meet with Their Majesties and to answer any question they might ask were a trio of Cabinet members, heads of Government agencies, and others who know how the other half of America lives.

Unconfirmed reports were to the effect that Mrs. Roosevelt arranged the get-together in order to offset criticism that the King and Queen on their American tour would have an opportunity to meet only persons of top-flight rank in finance and politics and not those who really make the wheels of Government and social work go around.

The tea, which began promptly at 4:30 o'clock and was a restful interlude for Their Majesties in a crowded day, lasted until almost 6

King George VI and Queen Elizabeth left Washington in their blue and silver dream train last night, bound for the New York's World's Fair and then Hyde Park.

With them went Gustave Lanctot, K.C., L.L.D., historian of the royal tour, with a brief case and a mind crowded with notes on Their Majesties' triumphant conquest of Washington. Without doubt, the visit here will call for a glowing chapter in Dr. Lanctot's opus.

Even the departure was a triumph, a nocturnal crowd of 75,000—a lot of people in this blase Capital—turning out to bid them farewell.

The King and Queen, having reached their train, stood on the rear platform. They were dressed as they had been at the British Embassy dinner, which they had just left, the King in white tie and tails, the Queen in a gorgeous evening gown and a brilliant diamond tiara—the first that many in the crowd had ever seen.

As photographers illuminated them with flashes, the King and Queen smiled and waved. They looked for all the world like two young vacationists who had enjoyed a good time, and were hesitant to leave their hosts. Once the Queen went into the car.

"We Want the Queen!"

"We want the Queen!" some in the crowd yelled. "Your Majesty is the way to say it," growled a seedy-looking individual who in 48 hours had become a devoted admirer.

As the crowd yelled for the Queen, King George remained on the platform, but turned an anxious eye toward the car door. Finally the Queen came back to stand by his side, and the crowd continued its cheering.

The British sovereigns were still smiling and waving as the palace-on-wheels pulled out for a city that expects to see them ride through the fair grounds with crowns on their heads.

The final event of their memorable sojourn in Washington was their dinner in honor of President and Mrs. Roosevelt at the British Embassy. So that they could properly play the role of hosts at this affair, they left the White House for the embassy a short time before the Roosevelts.

Queen Likes White House

"I wish I could stay longer," Queen Elizabeth said to the White House usher. "I have had a wonderful time."

There was a stir around town when it was noticed that the name of Vice President Garner was not on the guest list for the embassy dinner. It turned out, however, that "Cactus Jack," who usually goes to bed around 9 o'clock, had wangled himself out of the necessity of putting on evening clothes and missing his sleep.

Among those who were there—one of the two Republicans on the list—was Col. Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of State in the Hoover Cabinet and a strong supporter of the Roosevelt foreign policy. The other was Alanson B. Houghton, former envoy to both England and Germany.

Earlier in the day King George had paid homage to two soldiers of the republic.

His Majesty laid a wreath on the tomb of George Washington at Mount Vernon, and thereby gave the historians a new and final chapter for the story of the American Revolution.

The young British monarch, descendant of another George who regarded Washington as a "rebel and a traitor," went into the ivy-covered sarcophagus alone. It was one of the few ceremonies in which there were no blaring bands, no booming of guns, no crowds.

To the wreath of red, white and blue flowers which he reverently placed on the tomb of Britain's old enemy was attached a card inscribed "George R. I. and Elizabeth R."

From Mount Vernon, King George and Queen Elizabeth—the King riding with President Roosevelt and the Queen with Mrs. Roosevelt—traveled [illegible] one of the world's most beautiful boulevards to Arlington National Cemetery.

Here the King honored a fellow warrior of the World War, one "known but to God," America's Unknown Soldier.

As the party entered the gates of the cemetery, a 21-gun salute boomed out, and at the Tomb the Army Band played, first, "God Save the King," and then "The Star-Spangled Banner."

King George took a wreath from a sergeant of the Black Watch and, with profound solemnity, walked forward to place it on the sun-baked marble slab.

Leaving the Unknown's tomb, the King and Queen and other members of the party walked down a green slope to the Canadian Cross, a 27-foot granite monument which the Dominion of Canada erected in honor of the Americans who fought in the World War with the Canadian forces.

Here, after similar ceremonies, the King laid a wreath with a card bearing his and the Queen's name—"George R. I. (Rex Imperator) and Elizabeth R. (Regina)."

The King, who must have sweltered the day before in his admiral's uniform, wore morning attire, which was in striking contrast to President Roosevelt's cool white linen suit.

The Queen wore white silk and a picture hat, while Mrs. Roosevelt was in pink and black.

The day, like almost all the days of the royal tour, was a time-table whirl that saw them on the go from 10 a. m. onward.

The crowded program began when they left the White House for the British Embassy, where they held a reception for members of the British colony in Washington and nearby. An hour later they were on their way to the Capitol for a reception for members of Congress, which was enlivened by several members speaking to the King and Queen before they were spoken to.

143,000 Cheer Monarchs

From the Capitol they motored to the navy yard for the cruise to Mount Vernon on the Presidential yacht Potomac, and an interlude that must have been refreshing. They had luncheon on the way.

In the course of the day it was estimated that 143,000 persons here and in Alexandria and other points in Virginia cheered the British sovereigns.

The dinner at the British Embassy was delayed a quarter of an hour, chiefly because the King and Queen were late in arriving from the White House. It didn't make much difference, however, because President Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt, delayed in their dressing, were also late.

Announces Inquiry Into Charges of Short Sales of Own Stock

The Securities and Exchange Commission announced yesterday that it is investigating "discrepancies" in reports of transactions and holdings of duPont stock by Pierre S. duPont, chairman of the board of E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co.

It said the official summary of transactions and holdings of officers, directors and principal stockholders, published yesterday, includes corrections submitted by duPont of 20 previous reports of his direct holdings in the duPont common stock since November, 1934.

"Whereas the original reports show substantial net long positions," the commission announcement said, "the corrected reports disclose that throughout the period he owed substantially more shares than he owned."

The commission said that as of December 31, 1934, duPont reported he held 33,252 shares, while "his corrected report states that on that date he was minus 108,460 shares."

Various reports filed in the intervening period showed he held substantial amounts, the commission stated, "while corrected reports showed he was minus substantial amounts."

The commission asserted further that the original report for February 28, 1939, showed holdings of 73,394, while the corrected amount was "minus 26,542."

A footnote in a later report by duPont says:

"This figure (26,342 shares) represents 73,594 shares directly owned and registered in my name less 99,936 shares owing by me to Delaware Realty & Investment Co., a Delaware corporation, under a loan agreement dated October 25, 1929." On the basis of the closing price on the New York Stock Exchange of $167 a share for duPont common stock as of October 25, 1929, the market value of those shares was $16,683,312.

Bought 81,918 Shares

According to the report received by the SEC on May 10, duPont had made two deliveries of common stock against his borrowings from the Delaware Realty & Investment presumably. On December 31, 1937, he delivered 500 shares and on February 28, 1939, 41,276 shares.

On the basis of his "negative" stock position as of April 30 and taking a closing price of $149 a share for duPont common stock as of today, the market value of these "negative" holdings is $3,924,000.

In the period for which the reports to the commission were filed and up to and including January 31, 1939, duPont disclosed he had purchased 81,918 shares of his company's common stock.

The first purchase is listed for September 30, 1936, when he acquired 15,000 shares, thereafter the following purchases of common are recorded in his reports to the SEC: March 31, 1937, 3,500 shares; April 30, 1937, 2,900 shares; June 30, 1937, 4,100 shares; July 31, 1937, 8,400 shares; August 31, 1937, 3,800 shares; October 30, 1937, 1,000 shares; November 30, 1937, 300 shares; December 31, 1937, 1,700 shares; March 31, 1938, 4,918 shares; June 30, 1938, 200 shares; September 30, 1938, 5,500 shares; November 30, 1938, 3,100 shares; December 31, 1938, 10,500 shares, and January 31, 1939, 12,000 shares.

"In response to inquiries the commission stated it has undertaken to determine the facts and circumstances involved in these discrepancies," the SEC announcement said.

Denies Short Position

Wilmington, Del., June 9 (AP).—Pierre S. duPont, a director of E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co., disclosed today he had direct and indirect common stock holdings in the huge chemical concern worth at current market prices approximately $33,000,000.

"At present my direct holdings are almost 85,000 shares, and in addition I have indirect holdings of over 140,000 shares," he said in answer to an SEC report in Washington showing him "short" substantial amounts of the company's stock.

DuPont common, listed on the New York Stock Exchange, was quoted today around $150 a share.

In explanation of the "short" position, he stated:

"Mine is not a short account in the usual form made through a broker's office, but results from and in keeping with a long-term contract entered into in December, 1919.

"Throughout this period I have been a large holder, either directly or indirectly, of the common stock of E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co."

Citing court records of large direct and indirect holdings in 1919 and his present interests, duPont said the official report "does not correctly set forth the extent of my interest as an investor."

Standing on Floor Stained by Burning of 1814, British Rules Retake Capitol by Charm

By Robert C. Albright

In the rotunda of the Capitol, burned by the British in 1814, Their Britannic Majesties stood for 30 minutes yesterday and received a welcome softening the memory of ancient conflicts.

With easy grace and homely greeting, King George VI and Queen Elizabeth shook more than 400 eager Congressional hands and "wished there were more."

Only one handshake was withheld. Representative Mouton, Louisiana French Creole, bent instead and kissed the hand of the Queen, with a whispered: "May I have the privilege?"

Some 352 members of the House and 74 Senators, mostly informally dressed and as excited as school children, awaited their turn behind purple cords roping off the enclosure, then moved by the royal party in single file.

"Hello, Cousin George"

Warm greetings of "Welcome to America," and even one Texan's "Hello, Cousin George," mingled with the more formal "Your Majesty" and bows from the waist, as the House and Senate of the United States Congress added their tribute to Washington's ecstatic welcome.

And the smiling royal couple responded in the mood of each member, matching chivalric salutes with gallant replies, parrying each graceful turn of phrase with a timely rejoinder, pausing to chat with each woman member, and showing quick solicitude for two Representatives that passed on wheelchairs.

Washington had its moment in the sun, when Chairman Randolph of the House District Committe was introduced as the city's "mayor," and the King exclaimed:

"You have a lovely city!"

It was a memorable and unprecedented day in the history of the Capitol, and enthusiastic members talked of nothing else as they returned to their routine legislative tasks.

Marks of 1814 Fire.

Onto the rough stone floor of the rotunda, still showing the marks of the 1814 fire, walked the royal couple at 11:07 a. m. to take their place on a small plush carpet just to the right of the statue of Thomas Jefferson. Cheers went up from the waiting members and Kleig lights glared blindingly until Vice President Garner requested photographers to use them less frequently.

Outside, just in front of the main Capitol steps, a seated throng of 4,000 invited guests had seen Their Majesties arrive just two minutes before in the President's touring car. Beyond the roped, Marine-guarded plaza, another 10,000 craned for a view.

On the steps, a silk-hatted, morning-coated reception committee awaited them. The King stepped out first, followed by the Queen, to be greeted by Chairman Pittman, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Pitman presented each to members of the welcoming group—to Acting Chairman Bloom of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Senate Majority Leader Barkley, House Majority Leader Rayburn, Senate Minority Leader McNary, House Majority Leader Martin and to Sergeants at Arms Jurney and Romney of the Senate and House.

As the group started up the steps, applause from the crowd caused the Queen to turn her head in acknowledgment, and at the half landing the party halted with her to turn and wave. Inside the rotunda, Pittman presented Their Majesties to the waiting Vice President and Speaker Bankhead. They stood and chatted a minute.

Pictures of Revolution

Then the King and Queen, followed by Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, and Lady Lindsay, took their places with other members of the royal party and the welcoming committee just beneath the huge painting of Pocohontas. Across the rotunda from where they stood they might have seen other paintings of the Revolution—the Surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, the Surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga, the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Led by Senator Borah, of Idaho, in formal black, the Senators advanced according to seniority, to be presented by Pittman, standing to the left of the King. The Senators moved rapidly, and in seven minutes the last of the 74 had greeted Their Majesties, some bowing low, others merely inclining their heads.

Then Representative Bloom took his stand beside the King, and the House members advanced. Representative Sabbath (Democrat), of Illinois, "dean" of the House in years of service, yielded the lead to Representative Mansfield (Democrat), of Texas, who propelled himself forward in a wheelchair.

Time limitations had been impressed on the Congressional greeters, and few Senators paused to give more than a formal welcome. But as House members filed by the line slowed, as a score of Representatives gave a less formal greeting or were questioned by Their Majesties.

When Representative Nat Patton, of Texas, reached the receiving line he said, "Hello, Cousin George," his habitual greeting to friends. He later said that he did it because he regards the King "a great commoner," who has done more than others to seal friendly relations with this country.

"Patton told the King Texas "is the only State in the Union that was never in war with Great Britain," to which the King replied, "Fine."

Then the Texan addressed the Queen as "Cousin Elizabeth" and told her she is "nearly as pretty as the blue-bonneted girls of Texas."

It was Mouton, of Louisiana, who bent to kiss the Queen's hand. He addressed both in French, and told the King: "Votre Majeste, C'est mon troisieme privilege pour la raison que je vous est sairee la main deux fois hier." The King responded with "Merci," the French "Thank you."

But Representative Disney, of Oklahoma, after greeting the King, was unable to get out a word when presented to the Queen. He said later he "was so flabbergasted with the beauty of her eyes, I couldn't say anything."

Another flustered Representative, Wolcott, of Michigan, was touched on the coat by the Queen as he passed without greeting. "You are not going to pass without speaking, are you?" she smiled.

Upset His Prepared Speech

Cause of Wolcott's confusion, he later explained, was his good-natured presentation to the King by Bloom as "one of the chief objectors in the House." This upset a set speech he had rehearsed. Instead, he managed to say: "I have never objected to your being here. I think it is a fine thing for heads of two nations to meet in friendship."

As the steady procession continued, a trace of fatigue began to show on Their Majesties' faces, but they never ceased to smile cordially. Representative Gearhart, of California, must have noticed it for he told the Queen: "This is really an imposition. There are so many of us." This drew the Queen's graceful reply: "I wish there were more."

As Representative Miller, of Connecticut, a war veteran who lost his legs in an air crash, wheeled up in a chair, both the King and Queen leaned over to greet him.

"What outfit were you with?" asked the Queen. When Miller explained he was with the American air service in France, the Queen prompted: "Were you attached to the Royal Flying Corps at any time?" Miller was with the British corps for two months.

Mansfield, in wheel chair, also was engaged in conversation by Their Majesties. The Queen recalled she had seen him at the garden party the night previous. Mansfield told the royal couple they had "won the hearts of the American people."

The King and Queen had something to say or ask of each of the lady members.

"Tell me how many of you are there," said the Queen to Mrs. Caroline O'Day, of New York.

"There are four of us in the House, and one in the Senate," Mrs. O'Day replied.

In answer to the Queen's question on her connection with the House, Representative Mary Norton, of New Jersey, told Their Majesties she was "dean of women" and chairman of the House Labor Committee.

"How very interesting," said the Queen.

"Are you the third lady member?" Queen Elizabeth asked Representative Jessie Sumner, of Illinois.

"No, I'm the fourth," she replied.

Impressed by so Many Texans

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts, told the King she was "more glad to meet you because you were one of the heroes of the Battle of Jutland than because you are King."

First of the ladies to greet the royal couple was Senator Hattie Caraway, of Arkansas, who did not tarry to talk. She, too, shook hands with the Queen, but did not curtsy.

When Representative Beckworth, youngest member and one of the last in line, was presented as also "from Texas," the King asked: "How many members are there from Texas?"

He was told there are 21 in the House, two in the Senate and one more—Vice President Garner.

Bringing up the rear of each line were Senate and House officials, who were also presented. The Queen thought it was "wonderful" that Joseph Sinnott, House doorkeeper, had been at the Capitol a half century, and Sinnott hoped "you will be Queen for as long as I've been here."

40,000 Line Route

The Capitol itself was barred to all but members and a few representatives of the press. An estimated 40,000 persons who had lined Constitution avenue on the route to the Capitol by this time had dispersed, many of them joining those massed in the plaza park.

Only women and children had been assigned space in the plaza, but accommodations were enlarged at the last minute to make room for 28 former Senators and widows and 75 former House members and widows. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson had a front row of the seated guests. Capitol eployes crowded House and Senate steps.

Guards consisted of 260 Metropolitan police under Inspector B. A. Lamb, 400 Marines from Quantico under Lieut. Col John Clements, and 125 Capitol police led by Capt. W. S. Orthman.

Loud cheers, "Oh's" and "Ah's" again rose from the throng as the couple left.

Before entering the royal car, the King turned to Senator Pittman and said:

"I am unable to express the appreciation of Her Majesty and myself for the great courtesies and expressions of friendship on the part of everyone."

U.S. Bureau Plans Survey of D. C. Traffic Problem

A new survey to suggest methods of solving the District's traffic problem will be launched shortly by the United States Bureau of Public Roads, it was announced yesterday.

H. S. Fairbank, of the bureau, speaking before the advisory board of the American Automobile Association, said the survey is being made under authority of the Federal-aid highway act.

Press Women Say Nary a Word to Rulers

The Queen Says, 'Aren't There a Lot of You;' There Were—80

King George and Queen Elizabeth had a close-up of America's press women—more than 80 of them—yesterday morning following Mrs. Roosevelt's conference at the White House.

It didn't go off quite as the First Lady had planned. Her instructions to reporters before Their Majesties descended the stairway were needless. There wasn't time for any woman of the press to say a word; the King kept his thoughts to himself, and Her Majesty gave voice to only one comment, "Aren't there a lot of you?"

The newspaper women, who first assembled in the Green Room, later went to the corridor and arranged themselves in two neat rows facing each other, as if a spelling match were to be held. There was a hasty, whispered conference between Mrs. James M. Helm and Miss Malvina Thompson of the White House staff, and Lady Katherine Seymour, lady-in-waiting to Her Majesty, who couldn't have been more anxious and more unctious about the arrangement.

King Fumbles With Tie

Presently, Their Majesties came down the stairway, went straight to the Green Room, on to the Blue Room, and then paused briefly, surveying the double row of eager eyes fastened on them.

The spotlight shifted to Mrs. RRoosevelt as she said, "Your Majesties, the ladies of the press."

The King fumbled with his tie and looked as he had never seen so many writing women assembled before. The Queen took in the whole group at a glance, hesitated for a moment as if the experience was new to her, too.

The press women applauded and Their Majesties started down the aisle bowing this way and that. The King kept his eyes on the Queen. She smiled, but not so broadly as usual and gave that characteristic wave of the hand ever so often as she passed down the line.

All Over in Three Minutes

It was all done in three minutes, and Their Majesties had disappeared within four. There was a hasty comparison of notes as to what the Queen had on as the press women dispersed. Her dress of white flat crepe, accented with silver embroidery, was cut on simple lines, street length. Her accessories were a wide-brimmed white hat, long white gloves and a double strand of pearls. For once, the ubiquitous parasol that usually accents her ensemble was missing.

Earlier, Mrs. Roosevelt told reporters assembled in the Green Room that Her Majesty felt she could not have part in a press conference in this country since she had never done so in her own.

Mrs. Roosevelt said further that there would not be time for talking and handshaking with the Queen but that each reporter might give her name and that of the newspaper she represented.

Finds Queen "Unusual"

Answering questions about Their Majesties, the First Lady averred that both the King and the Queen are keenly interested in social welfare work and have displayed much concern in this regard. She elaborated particularly on the Queen's understanding and compassion, "unusual in one so young."

Mrs. Roosevelt believes that a royal visit can do much to promote peace "because it gives people a chance to see and know rulers of another country and to find out what they stand for."

The King and Queen have a huge visitors' book, leather-bound and gold-embossed, which carries the names of persons of importance who come to see them on this trip. (Mrs. Roosevelt showed it to reporters but declined to open it for them or to answer detailed questions about it.)

G.O.P. Neglected On Royalties' Visit, Complains Fish

By International News Service.

Complaint that President and Mrs. Roosevelt made scant provision for Republicans to meet the King and Queen of England was made today by Representative Hamilton Fish, ranking Republican on the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Although expressing hope that the visit of the British royal couple "will cement the friendship" between" England and the United States, Fish said "if it had not been for the Congressional reception it is doubtful if many of the minority party members would have had an opportunity of meeting either of them."

"The President apparently was under the impression that the King and Queen were not the guests of the Nation, but of the New Deal," he said.

Committee Urges 7 More Judges

A special Senate court reform Committee yesterday urged creation of two additional circuit judgeships and five additional district judicial posts.

An additional judgeship was recommended for the Sixth and another for the Eighth circuits. District judgeships recommended included one each for southern California, New Jersey, western Oklahoma, eastern Pennsylvania and Florida.

Scotland Yard, sir, is every bit as efficient, painstaking and resourceful as the movies and detective yarns have instructed all Americans to believe. Yesterday a U. S. Secret Service agent revealed that during the royal parade Thursday one of the Yard sleuths did his investigating disguised as a woman.

Three military detachments placed near the Canadian Cross in Arlington Cemetery snapped into action to meet a crisis yesterday. An hour before the royal party arrived, a tiny rabbit—a veritable pigmy among baby rabbits—reared his long-eared head on the lawn. F Troop of the Third Cavalry deployed, heading the aggressor toward A Battery of the Sixteenth Field Artillery. A skirmish followed, with the enemy retreating toward a company of the Twelfth Infantry. One of the doughboys made the catch, then released the cottontail far from the crowd. The feat was cheered.

In the mansion at Mount Vernon, the King was stopped by one of the invited guests—an elderly woman—who took his hand and started to talk. Mrs. Roosevelt, standing in the background, stepped forward, placed her hand in the small of the King's back and pushed him toward the door of an adjoining room through which the Queen already had passed.

One of the Britishers received by Their Majesties at the embassy yesterday morning was sent by his congregation. He was the Rev. Harcourt Johnson, of Winter Haven, Fla. When he received the summons, which included also a bid to the garden party, the members of his church were so excited they passed a collection plate and financed the venture.

One-Eyed Connally, gate-crasher extraordinary, was a rank novice compared to a souvenir hawker who penetrated a cordon of several thousand troops—Marines, sailors and detachments from every branch of the Army—who surrounded Arlington Cemetery ahorse and afoot. The man made his way to within a few feet of the Amphitheater before he was caught by two infantrymen and hustled out with spectacular effectiveness.

Britain's King and Queen yesterday visited the Navy Yard and were welcomed aboard the Presidential yacht at exactly the spot where, 125 yea s ago, Admiral Cockburn, commander of the British fleet which took the National Capital in 1814, landed his men. The yacht sported the most tradition-laden fla in its history. From the foremast fluttered the royal British standard. The President's flag flew from the mainmast.

Treasury Secretary Morgenthau and James Roosevelt, the President's eldest son and former secretary, took a joshing from cameramen when they sought to photograph the King and Queen at Mount Vernon. Roosevelt was told summarily to "get out of the way," and one cameraman challenged Morgenthau to produce his photographer's pass. The Treasury chief said he had none and asked, in mock belligerency, "Do you want to make something of it?" The press photographer said, "Not in this weather."

Congressional wives, usually Washington's utmost sticklers on form, did not hesitate to take along opera glasses to Capitol Hill to get a look at the Queen. Not enjoying the royal prerogative, they were commanded to shut parasols five minutes before the scheduled royal arrival.

Department of Sanitation officials still are trying to discover the identity of a colored trash collector who paraded past waiting crowds Thursday afternoon, preceding by an hour the royal motorcade to the British Embassy. Noting the crowds lined up on both sides of the cleared street, the roustabout climbed to the top of the trash pile and bowed, left and right, to the cheering crowds.

Edward Bendure, arm of the law, claims honors as the twentieth century Paul Revere. His job was to notify other policemen to clear the street of traffic after Their Majesties completed their tour of Capitol Hill. Mounted not on a horse but a motorcycle, Bendure saw the King and Queen depart from the Capitol and shouted, "The British are coming! Here comes the British!" His stuttering motorcycle obliged with a "Bang, Bang."

Edward J. Noble, first Undersecretary of Commerce in the history of the department, yesterday was given the oath of office by Edward W. Libbey, chief clerk.

E. J. NOBLE

Attending the ceremony were Secretary of Commerce Hopkins, Mrs. Noble, June and Sally Noble, daughters of the new undersecretary, and high department officials.

Noble, Connecticut Republican and business man, served as a $1-a-year assistant to Secretary of Commerce Hopkins pending creation by Congress of the $10,000-a-year job of undersecretary.

Coal Commission officials said yesterday they would endeavor to publish proposed minimum prices for the soft coal industry this month, before the commission's functions are transferred to the Interior Department.

They noted that publication of proposed prices would clear away all the work of getting coal prices established except the holding of a public hearing on the proposed figures.

Long-awaited legislation designed to ease the financial load of the West's irrigationists, by basing project water charges on the farmer's ability to pay, was introduced yesterday by Representative White (Democrat), of Idaho).

White, chairman of the House Irrigation and Reclamation Committee, said the measure was drafted by Reclamation Bureau fiscal experts and had the approval of the Budget Bureau.

Crop yields and market conditions would become the base in determining the amount farmers should pay to the Government each year. This method, reclamation officials said, would result in the virtual elimination of blanket moratorium on project repayment installments such as had been granted formerly and insure a steady flow of funds into the reclamation revolving fund from which most of the Federal projects are financed.

Establishing a precedent, the National Labor Relations Board has ordered tips included in the back-pay calculations for seamen fired in violation of the national labor relations act, the National Maritime Union was notified yesterday.

According to William L. Standard, N. M. U attorney, the Columbian Steamship Co. was ordered to pay 17 stewards the wages, subsistence and tips that would have accrued to them from August 9, 1937, the day they were discharged, until the middle of April, 1938, the day the Columbian Steamship Co. sold the S. S. Haiti, on which the men had been employed.

This, Standard said, would amount to more than $23,000. Each man, he said, was entitled to $55 a month in wages, $75 month in subsistence, and approximately $40 a month in tips—a total of $170 a month a man.

Navy Yard Puts On Best Show Yet for King

Royal Couple Leave For Mt. Vernon Amid Pomp and Ceremony

By John G. Norris

The Navy turned out its high command yesterday, brilliant in gold braid and gleaming white, welcomed the King and Queen with all the martial pomp and ceremony that is traditional of the sea, and then took them for a "tugboat ride."

No formidable battle cruiser was on hand for the cruise of the royal visitors to Mount Vernon. It was the President's yacht, U. S. S. Potomac, a former Coast Guard rumchaser, which carried the distinguished guests, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt and the Cabinet for an hour-and-a-half cruise down the river.

Dressed up was the 165-foot craft, which the President uses for weekend fishing trips, but altered and painted as it is, to the deep-sea sailors of the big battle-wagons and cruisers, it is still just a tug.

Best Show Yet

But it was the best show yet.

And symbolizing the close friendship between the two English-speaking nations—the world's greatest sea powers—was the sight of the royal standard of the King of England and the personal flag of the President of the United States floating from the Potomac's masts. Naval officers said it was the first time in history that an American naval vessel has borne the two ensigns. The King's flag was on the foremast, with the President's on the mainmast.

The crowd began arriving early to see Their Majesties. Marines and sailors with rifles lined the streets in the yard, the latter with their bell-bottomed trousers tucked in canvas leggings. The Navy Band, under Lieut. Benter, played and marched about the waterfront.

Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations and Acting Secretary of the Navy, was the first to board the Potomac. Mrs. Leahy accompanied him. Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., arrived next, followed soon after by Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Navy Secretary. Mr. Swanson, who is ill, was the only Cabinet member not present.

Secretary of War and Mrs. Woodring were the next arrivals, the former natty in blue suede shoes, light blue coat and "ice-cream" pants. Attorney General Murphy next put in his appearance, followed shortly afterward by Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Wallace and Secretary of Commerce Hopkins, the latter still showing the effects of his recent illness.

Postmaster General Farley smartly returned the salute of the captain of the Potomac, Lieut. W. R. Jones, as he stepped across the gangplank. Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull were next, followed by Secretary of Interior and Mrs. Ickes and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins. Only Secretary Hull among the Cabinet members wore formal dress, the others wearing blue coats and white trousers. Secretary Wallace and the President were all in white.

All members of the British entourage, including the King, however, were garbed in black cutaways and striped trousers.

Just before the President arrived, two sailors carried a carton aboard, containing the special drinking water the King has carried with him on the trip.

Then, with a great blow of horns and sirens, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt arrived. The Marines and sailors were called to attention; the Navy Band gave him four flourishes and, ruffles, and played "The Star-Spangled Banner." He was then "piped aboard," and went to the open promenade at the rear of the boat to stand at the rail.

King and Queen Cheered

A salute of 21 guns began booming out and many persons thought it was for the President. The customary salute, however, was omitted at his request, and the guns were for the King, just then entering the navy yard gates.

A cheer broke out as the King and Queen drove up. Rear Admiral George Pettengill, commander of the yard, and Lieut. Jones welcomed Their Majesties. The King then received the customary flourishes and ruffles and as everyone stood at attention, the band played "God Save the King." After being "piped aboard" between eight "sideboys" to the tune of a shrill boatswain whistle, the royal couple, with the King a few paces in front, walked down the narrow deck of the Potomac to where the President was standing to greet them.

"Good morning, how are you?" the President asked. "Did it turn out all right?"

Sailor Makes Them All Move

The President next shook hands with the Queen and wished her a good morning. Mrs. Roosevelt next greeted the royal couple, whose party came forward, one at a time, to shake hands.

The King and Queen and President and First Lady posed at the rail for the cameramen, and when all pictures were taken, a sailor came along and made them all move. They were standing on the mooring ropes.

However, as the ship backed away from the wharf, they returned to the rail, and stood waving as it started forward. The Marine guard did an about-face and presented arms as the Potomac passed. The saluting battery again fired honors to the King. Then flanked by Secret Service men in speed boats and escorted by the U. S. S. Cuyahoga, the little craft slid down the stream and out of sight toward Mount Vernon.

Royal Guard's Cycle Draws Spectator's Kick

A 35-year-old man with an apparent dislike for motorcycles was arrested last night at Dupont Circle a moment after the King and Queen rounded the circle on their way to the British Embassy.

According to police, the man leaped out from the curb and kicked at a motorcycle being ridden by an officer escorting the royal party. He was taken to the Third Precinct to be booked for investigation.

Remains of Gen'l George Washington."

The King said: "This is very interesting."

The President went back to his car that had brought him and the King and Queen to the side of the tomb. The King, followed by the Queen and a great entourage, strolled up the brick walkway to the Washington mansion.

The King moved in advance of all, up the hill, talking with C. C. Wall, the Mount Vernon superintendent. Both men, in torturing formal afternoon attire, the black coat tails sweeping them about the knees, perspired and halted frequently in the shade.

King "Extremely Warm"

Wall, later, said that the King complained casually of the heat.

"It is extremely warm," His Majesty was quoted as saying. But the small crowd, admitted by cards, did not know of his discomfort. His face never registered it; his handkerchief never went to his brow.

The walk up the hill to the mansion was the King's first exertion after leaving the wharf at Mount Vernon, where the U. S. S. Potomac arrived at 1:30 p. m. The party down the river included luncheon for Their Majesties and it afforded the King the chance for a private conversation with the President.

The stifling, windless day had left the river flat and seemingly motionless as the vessel was tied against the wharf. The royal party, with Cabinet members and their wives, were seated under a bright canopy on the upper deck aft. Members of the Cabinet were first off. The King, the Queen, President and Mrs. Roosevelt were the last.

Morgenthau Has Camera

The King and the President rode from the wharf to the tomb together. The Queen rode in a second car with Mrs. Roosevelt. The others walked up the hill, led by Postmaster General Farley, in white flannel trousers and a natty blue coat, and Ambassador Sir Ronald Lindsay, in formal afternoon attire. Behind them were the Cabinet officers and their wives. Secretary Morgenthau fidgeted with a movie camera. When the ceremonies were over he aimed it at nearly everything, and the photographers took pictures of him taking pictures.

It was all very relaxed then. The Royal party went in the mansion and Jim Farley began regaling the reporters with some stories of informal nature, out in the shade. The King and Queen were formally presented to the 24 vice regents of the Mount Vernon Memorial Association.

Then the Queen, emerging from the mansion, had the spontaneous notion of going into the restored smaller outbuildings, where the early American cooking utensils engaged her. They then swung into the gardens, encountering James Roosevelt taking moving pictures.

Alexandria Crowded

Alexander L. Reith, the head gardener, presented them with bouquets grown at Mount Vernon.

The royal party stayed about as long as the usual tourists. They actually had to be rounded up, for like all tourists they had split into little parties.

Alexandrians lined historic Washington street down its entire mile. In many places the crowd was ten deep. Numerous residents had invited friends in to garden luncheons and "ringside seats" on the front sidewalk afterward.

Disappointment ran when the royal party shot through the city at more than 40 miles per hour, without even a look in the direction of Christ Church—where they were expected to stop.

Onlookers were estimated at from 35,000 to 50,000.

Mt. Vernon Visit Seals Bonds, Say Britain's Papers

London (Saturday), June 10 (U.P.).—British newspapers almost unanimously interpreted the visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth to George Washington's Tomb as "sealing the bonds of friendship between the two great English-speaking nations."

Representative Nat Patton (Democrat), Texas, got lots of space for addressing Their Majesties as "Cousin George" and "Cousin Elizabeth." The News Chronicle, describing the Queen's reception of newspaper women, said: "American newspaper women were for once inarticulate with joy."

This paper criticized the presence of Secret Service men at President Roosevelt's press conference.

King and Garner Form Mutual AdmirationSociety

By the Associated Press.

King George VI thinks Vice President Garner one of the most interesting men he met during his crowded 36 hours in Washington, and the Texan thinks His Brittanic Majesty is a "mighty fine feller."

When the Vice President told the King good-bye yesterday he put an arm around the royal shoulders and told him how much he had enjoyed their talks. Next to President and Mrs. Roosevelt, King George probably talked to Garner more than to anybody in Washington.

At the White House party Thursday night, according to authoritative reports, the Texan aimed a little joke at "The Boss"—as he calls President Roosevelt.

"Why, I believe you have a more democratic system of government over there than we have," he was quoted as telling the King.

"The sovereign is a symbol, and when you have a vote of confidence in your legislative body, if it goes against the prime minister, he resigns, and has to have a general election. But over here he hangs on.'" The President and King George joined in the laughter.

Roosevelts Take White House Aides To Meet Royalty

President and Mrs. Roosevelt, accompanied by a number of White House employes, left last night for Hyde Park, where King George and Queen Elizabeth will be entertained at a picnic Sunday.

Several of the women employes will get a chance to meet the British sovereigns at the picnic.

Members of the party, besides the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, were Stephen T. Early, White House press secretary; Brig. Gen. Edwin M. Watson, member of the secretariat; Admiral Ross T. McIntyre, the President's physician; Capt. Daniel J. Callaghan, the President's naval aide; Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., Miss Margaret LeHand, Miss Malvina Thompson, Mrs. J. M. Helm, William D. Hassett, Miss Grace Tully, Henry M Kannee, Miss Roberta Barrows, Miss Louise Hachmeister, Mrs. Mary A. Eben, Miss Toinette Bachelder, Mrs. Dorothy J. Brady, George A. Fox, Dewey E. Long, Miss Edith L. Rowley and Leo A. de Waard.

Army Band played first "God Save the King" and then "The Star-Spangled Banner." The King, holding his top hat over his heart, stood with ramrod-like straightness, looking straight ahead. The President stood behind him, to his left.

As the guard of honor, comprised of four squads each of infantrymen, marines and bluejackets, snapped briskly to present arms at the conclusion of the anthems, King George took a few paces forward and received the wreath from Staff Sergt. George F. Tizard, who wore the colorful uniform of the Royal Highlanders of Canada.

With an earnestness and humility that made the rite deeply touching, rather than the usual perfunctory tribute, the King carried the floral piece of white carnations and lilies to the tomb, took four paces backward and then bowed his head with a sharp, staccato motion. He did not salute.

5,000 in Amphitheater

After the sounding of taps, Gen. Craig approached the King and then led the way up the steps of the amphitheater, followed by the Queen and Mrs. Roosevelt, Prime Minister Mackenzie King, Secretary Hull, the military aides and naval aides and other members of the party, with exception of the President.

The President, who had remained in his car, drove around the amphitheater to the Canadian Cross to witness the ceremonies there.

Passing through the trophy room, Their Majesties entered the amphitheater to the cheers of a crowd of 5,000 seated there. Crossing the platform, they proceeded down the north side of the colonnade and descended to the green slopes of Arlington from the west entrance as 2,500 more people outside took up the cheering.

When the procession reached the Canadian Cross, presented by the Dominion in memory of American citizens who fell in the World War while fighting under the Canadian flag, the Navy Band struck up "God Save the King," followed by "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The wreath His Majesty laid at the 27-foot granite cross was identical with the one placed at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Both bore cards reading "From George R. I. (Rex Imperator) and Elizabeth R. (Regina)."

Altogether, 9,000 persons saw the King and Queen at the Arlington services—1,500 gathered south of the Tomb, another 150 guest ticket holders on the steps, 5,000 inside the amphitheater and 2,500 on the green slopes near the Canadian Cross.

His Majesty in Black

Color was plentiful at the ceremonies, despite the King's severe black, the somber aspect of his formal cutaway coat broken only by the ribbons of the medals on his lapel. Sergt. Tizard, a wartime member of the Royal Highlanders of Canada, Forty-second Battalion of the famous Black Watch, fairly sparkled in his kilts as he handed King George the wreath.

There were, too, the brilliant and gold-braided uniforms of Gen. MacArthur, Maj. Gen. Hugh Drum, military aide to the King; Rear Admiral James O. Richardson, naval aide; Gen. Murray and others. The Queen looked cool in her white gown and a lavender corsage heightened the impression.

George Chats With Empire's Defenders

American Wearer Of Victoria Cross Especially Honored

By Christine Sadler

While a band from His Majesty's ship Exeter played "Troops," an American war veteran who once fought for the British Empire walked away with top honors yesterday when King George VI and Queen Elizabeth reviewed some of their former service men in the garden of the British Embassy.

The first to be presented to Their Britannic Majesties was Dr. Belenden Seymour Hutcheson, a native of Mount Carmel, Ill. He wore the Victoria Cross, Britain's highest military award. He won it as medical officer with the Seventy-fifth Canadian Battalion in the World War.

First to be addressed by the King was A. E. Graham, of 3206 Wisconsin avenue northwest, who lost a leg at Amiens in 1918—also fighting with the Canadians.

'I Am an American, Sir'

When the King asked Graham how long he had been in America, things began to get more mixed up by the minute. "I am an American, sir," he answered, declaring later that he "forgot all about those majesty rules."

Nearly 1,000 Britons and former service men filled the Embassy garden for the review. For fully a half-hour the King and Queen mingled with their subjects and former subjects, most of them now residents of Washington.

The band had been brought from the Exeter, now at anchor at Baltimore, to play the tune which calls the colors in the British navy. The notes of "God Save the King" heralded the approach of Their Majesties. The crowd joined in the singing and there were numerous wet eyes.

The King, who was dressed in formal morning attire, was accompanied by Ambassador Sir Ronald Lindsay and followed by members of the official party. He passed completely around the square of 250 veterans.

Cheering for him and his lovely Queen, who carried her parasol aloft, was reverent and restrained. Queen Elizabeth wore the summer white dress she used for her reception in the Capitol rotunda.

She conversed for several minutes with the Rev. Donald McLean, professor of political and social sciences at Catholic University, and then presented him to the King. They talked, the professor said later, about the "marvelous influence this tour is having for world peace and the tremendous impression which has been made on Canadians, especially by the King's address in Quebec."

"Just the image of his father" and "I never dreamed I'd see him like this" were typical of remarks the Britishers made to each other during the reception.

The hoorays of loyal subjects rose lustily from British throats. The review over, the King returned to the Embassy steps while the crowd joined the soldiers in another three cheers which ended in "We want the Queen!"

Within a few minutes Their Majesties reappeared and others were singled out for presentation, among them consular officials from many American cities and members of the Embassy and the South African Legation staffs.

Compliments Sergeant

The broadest grin on anybody's face was worn by Charles F. M. Browne, when the King complimented him on his 50 years as a chancery servant.

Little 3-year-old Isabelle Kinloch, of Washington, guided on a leash held by her mother, won a pat on the head from the Queen.

Ten women veterans formed a hollow square at one side of the tree-shaded garden, where they were the last to be greeted by the King and the first to get a word from the Queen. They were Mrs. Louis Breslow, who served with the W. A. A. C.'s; Miss Anne Maria Leahy, of the New Zealand Red Cross; Mrs. Martha N. Scott, of Queen Alexandra's Military Nursing Service; Mrs. Lillian Hadley, Mrs. Margaret McIntosh, Miss Elizabeth Riach, all nurses, and Mrs. M. Morton, a former hospital matron in France.

89 Silent Sentries At White House Let King Sleep

Fearful of waking the King and Queen, sentries stationed at the White House during the royal visit did not chant "All's well" throughout the night as they otherwise would have done.

Eighty-nine soldiers manned 24 sentry posts around the White House while the royal couple were there—but they uttered not a sound.

The guard consisted of troops of the Third Battalion, Twelfth Infantry Regiment, with First Lieut. Avery Cochran in command. Second Lieut. William R. Crawford was in command of the 16 sentry posts in the rear of the White House and Second Lieut. P. C. Tinsley in command of the eight posts in front.

One thing that pleased the soldiers was the fact that both President Roosevelt and the King returned their individual salutes.

Red Bank Gets Out the Plush For Royal Pair

New Jersey Governor Will Help Mayor and 12,000 Greet Them

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Red Bank, N. J., June 9—Red Bank's 12,000 citizens were proud, mighty proud, tonight that King George and Queen Elizabeth were going to make a 20-minute stop tomorrow in this "truly representative great American small town."

Said Mayor Charles R. English: "Our reception may not be as gold-braided as the one in Washington, nor as gigantic as the one in New York, but it will be warm and genuine.

Two hundred thousand other sons and daughters of New Jersey are expected to be on hand to greet Their Majesties when the royal train arrives from Washington.

Plush Is Ready

The train is due to roll in at 9 a. m., (Daylight Saving time). Following brief welcoming ceremonies by Mayor English and Gov. A. Harry Moore, a 25-car motorcade will drive slowly to Fort Hancock, 14 miles away, to board the U. S. Destroyer Warrington that will carry the royal party up the bay to New York.

Everything's in readiness here, right up to the new plush carpet on the depot platform and the Cameron Bagpipers of Montclair.

New York Prepares

New York, June 9.—The Nation's largest city tonight massed the Nation's mightiest welcoming force for a couple of democratic British sovereigns.

The Battery will be a bedlam of roaring cannon and screaming ship whistles when the British King and Queen arrive tomorrow at 10:15 a. m. aboard the U. S. destroyer Warrington. At least 2,000,000 will welcome Their Majesties as they ride through 51 miles of New York streets en route to the World's Fair.

Gov. Lehman and Mayor LaGuardia will meet the monarchs at the Battery and escort them to the "World of Tomorrow."

Thirteen thousand police will guard the route. Special precautions also have been taken at sea, with mine sweepers preceding the destroyer from Fort Hancock, N. J. A crack cavalry guard of 24 Indian youths will serve as Their Majesties' guard of honor during their three and a half hours' stay at the World's Fair.

Leaving the fair, the royal couple will inspect Columbia University, and at 3:15 p. m. will entrain for President Roosevelt's estate at Hyde Park.

Hyde Park Growing

Hyde Park, N. Y., June 9.—Secret Service agents, State police and Army officials tonight led the friendly invasion of a host of well-wishers who are expected to swell this sleepy town of 2,500 to more than 100,000 when the British King and Queen drop in tomorrow for a Roosevelt hot dog picnic.

The visiting sovereigns are due in the President's home town at 5:15 p. m.

The King and Queen, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt and their party will attend services in the St. James Protestant Episcopal Church. The church can only seat 250 persons, so that more than 100 regular parishioners will be unable to enter.

Crime Falls Off; 'Thieves Must Have Gone to Parade'

Detectives thumbed through their reports last night and muttered a prayer of thanksgiving.

Now that the visit of the King and Queen is ended, the story can be told. Washington, with the exception of the downtown area, was patrolled by fewer than 100 policemen during the daylight hours Thursday and most of Thursday night.

Rough figures show that there was but one policeman for more than each square mile of territory in the District, an estimate which includes those in the station houses, scout cars, and those guarding prisoners at hospitals.

And with all this lack of police protection on the streets, there was no crime to speak of, according to Assistant Detective Chief Ira E. Keck.

"All the good thieves must have gone to the parade," remarked Lieut. Joseph W. Shimon, chief of the pickup squad.

Camping Benefits Urged at Y.W.C.A.

The challenge of camping as a means of "relieving the strain which modern life imposes upon youth" was emphasized yesterday at the annual meeting of the recreation committee of the Council of Social Agencies, held in the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets northwest.

Dr. Thomas W. Gosling, who presided, accepted reappointment as volunteer chairman of the committee for the coming year.

Friend of King's Mother Gives Him Picture of Himself at 9

By George Thorpe.

Among the souvenirs of America that King George will take back is a fading photograph of himself as a carefree lad of 9—35 years before he assumed the responsibilities of empire—and the memory of a conversation with a Washington woman, his mother's friend for half a century.

Sheltered for a moment from the blazing sun and the routine of official greetings of Thursday's garden party, in a shady glen on the British Embassy grounds, the King smilingly accepted from Mrs. Lawrence Townsend the picture that carried him back to the autumns of his youth at Sandringham Palace.

"I have a photograph, Your Majesty, that might remind you of your childhood," Mrs. Townsend said.

Scrutinizing the picture, which bore on its back the jottings of his mother, the King replied, "I had forgotten this one—how amusing—may I have it?"

"Certainly, sir, but please show it to Queen Mary," said Mrs. Townsend.

Mrs. Townsend could have shown the King other mementos of his youth—autographed pictures of the Queen Mother; of his grandfather, the late King Edward VII, with Mrs. Townsend on one of her visits to Sandringham, and sheet music copies of "Sandringham March," "Berceuse" and "Rustic Serenade" which she composed for the royal family.

Mrs. Townsend first met Queen Mother Mary, then Princess Mary of Teck, at St. Moritz, Switzerland, in 1889, where her husband was doing research work preparatory to entering the American Diplomatic Corps.

The acquaintance was renewed when Mr. Townsend was serving as American Minister to Portugal and later Belgium, after the turn of the century, and indirectly through the friendship Mrs. Townsend's sons, Lawrence and Rex, struck up at Wellington College, England, with the Queen's royal kinsman, Alexander, and Maurice Battenburg, now Lord Carisbrook.

Mrs. Townsend, who was then embarking on a life-time musical career, paid frequent visit to Sandringham, where she and Queen Alexandra played on twin pianos.

Mrs. Townsend told yesterday of a minor furor at Sandringham in 1904 when she brought the newly marketed toy automobiles to the young princes, Albert, the present King, and Edward, Duke of Windsor.

"The boys came up from York Cottage, where they lived on the Sandringham estate, saluted their grandfather, the Prince of Wales—Queen Victoria was on the throne, and it was not until later that he became Edward VII—then threw themselves on the toys.

"As they shot the tiny autos around the room the royal house guests unbent to join in the fun. Count Mensdorf, Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, rolled on the floor with the lads and the Dowager Duchess of Manchester shrieked in mock terror as the autos shot at her from across the room."

Outstanding in Mrs. Townsend's memory is the preternatural intelligence displayed by young "Bertie."

"He was the brightest of all the children, the quickest to grasp the idea of the 'new-fangled' toys. And he had a sense of humor remarkable for such a young child too.

"I saw that same look of humor and friendliness in his eyes when I talked to him yesterday."

Czech Nurse Reported Held In Nazi's Death

Gave Self Up After Germans Fined Town $20,000, Prague Hears

By the Associated Press.

Prague, June 9.—A young woman of Czech nationality was reported in unofficial quarters tonight to be in police custody in connection with the slaying of a German police sergeant at Kladno which brought about a $20,000 fine and severe punitive measures against that community.

Gendarmerie headquarters at that mining and industrial center neither denied nor confirmed the report, but there was a sudden burst of activity on the part of the officers. Dozens of gendarmes hurried from the headquarters in little groups.

Levied $20,000 Fine

The woman was said to be a nurse. At a hospital at which she was employed she was described as "a great patriot." It was admitted that she was being questioned.

The report was that she had voluntarily given herself up to the authorities.

It came after German officials levied the 500,000 crown ($20,000) fine on the Kladno district of Bohemia-Moravia and ordered that anyone withholding information of the slaying be shot upon discovery.

A police official asserted that in collection of the penalty Jews and persons known to have been ardent supporters of former President Benes would be obliged to make the greatest contributions.

Motive for Slaying in Doubt

The penalty, it was said, would be imposed on the police district of the Kladno territory, embracing several villages as well as the city of Kladno.

Whether the motive of the shooting lay in the growing tension between German authorities and the Czech population or whether personal reasons were at the bottom of the incident had not been established.

Bonnet Renews Promise to Fight for Poles

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 9.—Foreign Minister Bonnet emphasized today France's unreserved promise to fight for Poland after conferring privately with Julius Lukasiewicz, Polish Ambassador to Paris.

Bonnet, speaking at a luncheon of a group of Deputies interested in French-Polish relations, underlined the assurances already given Poland by Britain and France.

At the same time, France ordered 14 more warships built to strengthen her fleet. They included for 3,000-ton destroyers capable of speeds of more than 40 knots and heavily armed; six 1,000-ton destroyers only slightly less heavily armed and almost as fast, and four 600-ton minesweepers.

France and Poland, he said, "have guaranteed each other immediately and directly against any menace, direct or indirect, which would endanger their vital interests."

The foreign ministry, meanwhile, was following carefully reports from the Free City of Danzig and from Germany of two-day Nazi demonstrations to be staged in the Free City.

Awake 35 Hours Guarding Royalty

Lieut. Herbert L. Marcy, acting chief of the White House police, had gone for 35 hours without sleep by the time the King and Queen left the White House last night. He was up and about at 5 a. m. Thursday, and at 8 p. m. yesterday was still going strong.

Hitler's 'Mein Kampf' Copyright Upheld

New York, June 9 (AP).—The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals made a decision favorable to Adolf Hitler today in order to protect refugees from Hitler's and other regimes.

The court ruled that Hitler, regardless of his former citizenship—which was questioned in the suit—was entitled to the protection of the American copyright laws on his book "Mein Kampf."

Baby Clipper Clew

Milford Haven, Wales, June 9 (INS).—Wreckage, believed to be that of the baby clipper in which the American flier, Thomas H. Smith, left Old Orchard, Me., on May 28, on a transatlantic flight, was hauled up from the sea today by the fishing trawler Yezo 150 miles west of the Scilly Islands, off Cornwall, England.

Mrs. M. D. Doyle Dies

Paris, June 9 (U.P.).—Mrs. Pauline Munn Doyle, of New York, Washington and Philadelphia, died today at the American Hospital. Her husband was M. Dorland Doyle and she was a cousin of Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, jr., United States Ambassador to Poland.

Rulers Get Inside View on New Deal at Tea

o'clock. The arrival of a special hairdresser for the Queen brought it to an end.

William Green, head of the American federaion, was a guest, trimly turned out in a cutaway, striped trousers, a silk hat and gray gloves. He arrived well ahead of time—in a taxicab.

John L. Lewis, of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, was asked, but declined.

Secrecy was supposed to veil the plans for the party to which no reporters were invited. But here's what happened:

Without a minute's delay, guests assembled at the appointed hour on the south lawn of the White House and gathered in clusters beneath the shade of the poplar, maple and linden trees a few feet from the portico. Shortly afterward, the King and Queen appeared with President and Mrs. Roosevelt and the guests were presented to them.

Just Eager Inquirers

Not a curtsy was dropped, and bows were scarce as quintuplets. For a brief interval Their Majesties apparently forgot they were crowned heads of one of the most important nations on earth, and became two average foreign visitors eager to find out as much as possible about this country.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who made out the guest list, mingled in the crowd and saw to it that everybody had a chance to talk with either the King or the Queen, or both.

Three Cabinet members—Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins—chatted briefly with the King, and then took turns talking with the Queen.

Guests gathered in a little group around the President as Mrs. Roosevelt mingled in the crowd mentioning to first one, and then another, "The King wants to ask you something about your work," or "The Queen would like to talk with you next."

It was understood that no guest was to question either of Their Majesties—it seems that's never done—but was to linger as long as questions were forthcoming.

Tea, hot and iced, was served. The King talked with William Green over a cup of tea; asked him about the unemployment situation. Green told him there were between ten and eleven million persons without jobs in this country, but that business was picking up and job-getting along with it.

The Queen questioned Miss Perkins briefly; then talked with Miss Katherine Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau, about child welfare. Before the hour was over, every person present had a royal chat.

Couple Well Informed

Admiral Richard E. Byrd, who was in the company, had quite a talk with His Majesty, as did Stewart McDonald, Federal Housing Administrator; Nathan Straus, head of the United States Housing Authority, and Elmer Andrews, wage and hour administrator.

Col. Francis Harrington, WPA administrator, was another who talked with both the King and Queen. Mrs. Florence S. Kerr, assistant WPA administrator, chatted with the Queen, who then turned to questioning Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, chairman of the women's division, National Democratic Committee.

While most guests interviewed afterward preferred not to be quoted, the consensus of opinion was that both the King and Queen were amazingly well informed about social and economic activities of the Administration.

The women who talked with Her Majesty came away singing her praises in no uncertain terms, and in general seemed to agree with Mrs. Roosevelt's tribute, voiced at her press conference. "The Queen is a social-minded young woman with a compassionate understanding of the conditions which push people to desperation."

Turning to Clothes

Fashion Notes: The Queen had changed from the white ensemble she wore on the Potomac trip to a simple figured chiffon, featuring small blue and rose figures on a natural background. With it she wore a wide-brimmed white hat and matching accessories.

Mrs. Roosevelt, the only hatless lady in the company, wore a white flat crepe frock, made on tailored lines.

Several of the men were in summer whites, but the King wore a dark blue sack suit; the President also was turned out in a business suit, and Admiral Byrd, similarly garbed, topped off his attire with a green-visored straw hat that might well be worn fishing.

Very snappy was Mrs. Woodward in a white frock and wide-brimmed matching hat, her ensemble being accented with a corsage of purple-tipped white orchids. Mrs. Kerr was in navy blue and also wore orchids, and Mrs. McAllister was in a Nile green dress, set off with a small beige hat.

Others there included the British Ambassador and Lady Lindsay, Lady Nunburnholme, Lady Katherine Seymour, Alan Lascelles and Ljeut. Col. Piers W. Legh, of the royal entourage; Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; John H. Fahey, head of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board; Will W. Alexander, of the Farm Security Administration; Aubrey Williams, head of the National Youth Administration, and Miss Mary Anderson, of the Women's Bureau, Department of Labor.

Still others there were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parish, G. Hall Roosevelt, the First Lady's brother, and sons of the President with their wives, Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt and Mr. and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr.

Mrs. Irredell Prost, accompanied by her two children and one of their playmates. The quartet came up from their farm in Catlett, Va., especially to see the King and Queen, and entered the cemetery gates at 6:45 a. m.

Late yesterday a taxi whipped up to the closely guarded White House gates. A florid-faced man inside, unknown to all observers, presented a pass and was allowed to enter. The "mystery man" was Frank Powell, hairdresser to the Queen.

District Commissioner Hazen yesterday announced that if he had the power to create "colonels," he would make the man responsible for the spectacular street cleaning job the day before an admiral. In charge of the work, which involved the removal of litter from downtown streets, was William Xanten, head of the refuse division.

Sidelights Of Royal Day

His son's graduation was a greater attraction to Representative Satterfield (Democrat), of Virginia, than a chance to shake hands with the King and Queen. Satterfield went to Richmond yesterday to attend the graduation of his son from preparatory school.

A commercial airliner came within five minutes of interfering with the impressive rites at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Had the plane, flying low to land at Washington Airport, passed over the Tomb that much later it would have provided a discordant note when the King placed his wreath. "Guess the pilot was just giving his passengers an extra treat," said an Army officer, when he had finished frowning. "He knows it's against regulations to fly over the Tomb at any time and certainly at a time like this."

Late yesterday afternoon, a White House reporter found the doors of the executive office building barred to him. Inside, a newspaperwoman found herself imprisoned in the press room. After a few minutes, routine was resumed. Occasion for the blockade was a surprise visit of the King to the executive offices, personally conducted by the President, who showed His Majesty the 12-foot lobby table, covered with a single slab of Philippine mahogany, a gift of the once elusive rebel Aguinaldo.

Newsmen were kept at a distance at yesterday afternoon's informal tea for Their Majesties at the White House, but still were able to report that the Queen, who shook hands and chatted with all those invited, threw her arms around Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr.

Earliest arrival at Arlington National Cemetery yesterday was

British Open Propaganda Drive on Nazis

Chamberlain, Halifax Gestures to Counter Encirclement Talk

By the Associated Press.

London, June 9.—Gestures toward Germany by both Prime Minister Chamberlain and Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax were described by sources close to the government tonight as the beginning of a vigorous British counter-propaganda campaign to offset Nazi charges of "encirclement."

The purpose of statements by the prime minister and secretary in Parliament yesterday that Britain was willing to discuss Germany's claims for economic "living room" was not immediately clear and gave rise in some quarters to suspicion that the government might be turning back toward its discarded policy of appeasement.

Shift in Policy Denied

Official sources, however, were quick to deny any shift from what they called the new policy of "peace by resistance."

The Parliamentary correspondent of Reuters, British news agency which has close connections with the government, also said flatly that the intention of the statements was "to answer encirclement propaganda."

As indications that the prime minister and his foreign secretary were aiming their words primarily at the ears of the German public, officials pointed to these facts:

Chamberlain expressed hope that the British Broadcasting Corporation would carry his statement in its German language broadcast, inaugurated a few months ago to get around Nazi censors and to present the British point of view in Germany.

Nazis See Propaganda

Lord Halifax said one of the chief dangers in the present situation was that "the German people as a whole should drift to the conclusion that Britain had abandoned all hope to reach an understanding with Germany."

The B. B. C. broadcast Chamberlain's statement in full and broadcast the lengthier statement of the foreign secretary almost in full.

The German press apparently regarded the declarations as propaganda for Berlin editorial comment was unanimous in assailing them as "British maneuvers to distract attention," as "old tricks of intrigue against the axis," and as "fine words mixed with insults."

Soviet to Free Mrs. Rubens Today But Won't Tell Husband's Fate

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, June 9.—Swift Soviet court action, dropping spy charges, brought a promise of freedom tomorrow for Mrs. Ruth Marie Rubens, American, imprisoned in Russia for a year and a half, but produced no answer to her only question—"Can you tell me anything about my husband?"

Admitting she entered the Soviet Union in 1937 with a false passport, the brunette Mrs. Rubens coolly puffed a cigarette while awaiting a sentence of 18 months, which she already had served except for one day. The trial, announced only shortly before it began, lasted 40 minutes.

Her husband, who disappeared from a Moscow hotel shortly before she was arrested, December 9, 1937, was known both as Adolph Arnold Rubens and as Donald Robinson. He has not been heard of since, despite efforts of the United States Embassy and the State Department in Washington to get to the bottom of the mystery.

The judge's response to Mrs. Rubens' request for information about her husband was only "No, not yet."

When asked if she had anything to say before sentence was passed, Mrs. Rubens declared in English:

"A false passport was found on me. I have no defense."

United States Embassy officials were present to witness the quick little courtroom drama but it was not known whether she would be turned over to American officials for possible prosecution on charges of falsifying a passport.

(Both Mrs. Rubens and her husband are under indictment in the United States on charges of obtaining fraudulent passports.

(The State Department in Washington indicated it wished for prosecution of the charges against her, which carry a possible penitentiary sentence of five years and fine of $2,000.)

George Keenly Interested in CCC Cuisine

Quizzes Boys Closely; Rulers Shake Hands Of Dozen Enrollees

By Eugene Pharo.

King George VI proved himself to be first in his kingdom even in the kitchen, for when the royal party toured the CCC camp mess hall and barracks at Fort Hunt, Va., he, and not the Queen, went over the menu and asked the questions about cuisine.

Both shared about equally in a review of the boys, and the handshaking and questioning that gave at least a dozen enrollees and officers something to write home about. And both chatted as well with the civil engineer at the camp, H. S. Dickson, formerly of Dundee, Scotland, who, as an apprentice, surveyed the land around Glamis Castle, the Queen's former home.

King Shows Keen Interest

"I don't know how anyone could leave Scotland," Dickson later quoted the Queen in his own thick burr.

King George showed polite interest in the personnel of the camp when he began the review of the 187 boys, with the Queen and Mrs. Roosevelt. The President remained in his car.

But as he began to ask questions, and quickly accepted an invitation to visit the barracks and mess hall it became apparent he was genuinely interested. Only Mrs. Roosevelt spent more time than he in talking with camp officials, after the Queen had folded her parasol and re-entered her car, and the President's automobile was drawn into position for leaving.

Capt. Blair E. Henderson, camp commander, and Robert Fechner, CCC director, accompanied the King during the review, and Lieut. Col. H. McE. Pendleton, commander of the Towson district, and Charles H. Taylor, assistant director, accompanied the Queen. Arthur Demeray, associate director, National Park Service, accompanied Mrs. Roosevelt. The royal couple greeted seven of the boys, asking them about their homes.

In the course of this inspection King George engaged Capt. Henderson in detailed questions about the cuisine, training of the camp directors, and various CCC activities. Stopping finally before a display of more than 40 photographs typical of CCC activities throughout the country, which had been arranged by special request of President Roosevelt, King George looked at more than half of them intently.

Astonished By Captain's Youth

As he talked with Capt. Henderson his eye began to rove over the uniform and insignia of the officer and he was overheard to ask, "Aren't you very young for a job like this?"

Capt. Henderson, who is about 30, replied he had been a captain in the reserves for four years, and explained, at the King's request, the American system of training reserve officers.

It was shortly after 3 when the party left, leaving officers and men with whom the King and Queen had shaken hands, to compare experiences, and fix the details in mind for the home folks. Three of the boys had talked with the Queen —Stanley J. Kanek, Old Forge, Pa.; Philip Doherty, jr., Transfer, Pa., and James R. Ketchem, Waynesburg, Pa.

The boys with whom the King talked were Harold A. Plaitz, Braddock, Pa.; John A. Chestnut, Farrell, Pa.; William H. Scully, West Bridgewater, Pa., and John Draganza, Rochester, Pa. Their Majesties asked the boys how long they had been there, where they lived, and how they liked the camp. None of them said they didn't like it. King George stopped for a longer chat with Sergt. Draganza, asking him how much weight he had gained, where he slept and how he liked it, and ended by shaking hands with him.

Officials besides those named who were introduced to and shook hands with the King and Queen, were First Lieut. Elmer E. Ebersole, Cav. Res.; First Lieut. Martin L. Cannon, Med. Res., camp surgeon, and James Halloran, jr., educational adviser.

President to Send 'All the Pictures' Of Visit to King

"I'll send you all the pictures," said President Roosevelt to the King.

And King George smiled his thanks, as the U. S. S. Potomac backed slowly away from the dock at the Navy Yard and sailed down the river to Mount Vernon yesterday.

The King and Queen and President and Mrs. Roosevelt lined up at the rail of the Potomac for cameramen just before sailing, and the King was heard to ask who was the man in the Navy uniform among them.

"He's the official Navy photographer," replied the Chief Executive. "I'll have the Navy send you all the pictures they take."

Chief Photographer Peter F. Leroy, U. S. N., took the pictures.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Chicago Reporter Just Walks Into Garden Party

Docile dozens of Washington society folk who were not invited to the garden party for the King and Queen, and took it lying down, yesterday raised lorgnettes in salute to a Chicago tabloid reporter who strolled into the swanky affair without benefit of invitation.

Keith Wheeler, here to cover the royal visit for the Chicago Times, joined 1,200 of the elect on the sleek Embassy lawns by simply walking through Sir Ronald Lindsay's front door two hours before the party began.

He conversed amiably with gardeners, policemen and dignitaries, fondly recalled worse places he had been thrown out of and at 6:30 p. m. found himself among the last to leave.

One-eye Connaly is reported to be considering retirement.

Finns Maintain Record; To Pay Again June 15

Finland, only war-debtor now honoring her obligation to this country in full, is keeping up her record by making the regular June payment of $160,693.

The Finnish Minister, H. J. Procope, in a letter to Secretary Hull, said the Finnish government would deposit the amount in the Federal Reserve Bank, New York City, June 15.

Two Rulers Anxious Over World Perils

President Reveals He And King Talked Without Restraint

By Felix Cotten.

The aggressiveness of totalitarian powers and the threat of another world war were among the things President Roosevelt and King George talked about during the two-day visit of the British sovereigns.

At his press conference, attended by British and Canadian as well as American correspondents, the President revealed that part of his talks with the King dealt with world politics.

The conversation on this subject, he explained, was full and unrestricted, just as it might be between any two private individuals.

The crowned and elected heads of the two great English-speaking nations found themselves expressing mutual anxiety over the trend of events, the President indicated.

Asked for his impression of the royal visitors, the President replied: "They are very, very delightful people."

The change that has come over Washington in the last 40 years mingled with the international situation as a topic of conversation on the 30-mile sightseeing tour Thursday, the President said.

When the procession moved through the cool, upper reaches of Rock Creek Park, however, the conversation turned to the quiet forest scene, and the President confessed to the King that he was lost.

For about 20 minutes, he said, he traveled driveways he never had been over before.

Washington, the President and Sir Ronald told the King, is the only capital in the world, with the exception of Canberra, Australia, that was built for a capital. And Canberra could very well be left out because it has not been finished.

Asked what had interested the King most, the President said he was keenly interested in everything, just as would anyone who had never been here before.

George F. Steward, chief press liaison officer for the royal visitors, said afterward that the thing that had impressed them most was "your warm reception—and I don't mean the weather."

Asked about published reports that, at the King's suggestion, he had called him "George," the President said he was afraid he would have to characterize this as a newspaper story.

President Roosevelt appeared in shirt sleeves at his press conference.

Presbyterians Dedicate Church Tomorrow

Architect's sketch of $95,000 Northminster Presbyterian Church Building

Northminster Presbyterian Church will formally dedicate its new $95,000 edifice at Alaska avenue and Kalmia street northwest tomorrow at 4 p. m., with the Rev. Peter Marshall, pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, delivering the main address.

Assisting the Rev. Walter E. Price, pastor, will be Dr. Freely Rohrer, stated clerk of the Washington City Presbytery; Dr. Bernard Braskamp, of Gunton-Temple Presbyterian Church; the Rev. R. Paul Schearrer, Takoma Park Presbyterian; the Rev. Walter Wolf, Arlington Presbyterian; the Rev. J. Herbert Garner, Sixth Presbyterian, and the Rev. Hugh K. Fulton, D.D., of Rawlings, Wyo.

Miss Ann Evans, of the Metropolitan Methodist Church, and the Northminster Choir, directed by Mrs. Myron Witters, will sing. Howard S. Miller is organist.

Organized in 1906 through the union of the old Assembly Presbyterian and the North Presbyterian Churches, the Northminster congregation erected a building at Rhode Island avenue and Eleventh street northwest, where it stood until fire destroyed it in 1936. The Rev. Mr. Price came in 1933.

In 1926, under the pastorate of the Rev. Hugh K. Fulton, the present site was purchased, which has served as a chapel since. Ground was broken in May, 1938, for the new building of stone construction and English Gothic architecture. An organ, gift of L. E. Breuninger, will be dedicated next Thursday night.

Dr. R. H. Stone To Begin 4th Year Here

Has Baptized 95, Received 225 More At Lincoln Road

The Rev. Reginald Heber Stone, D. D., begins his fourth year's pastorate at Lincoln Road Methodist Church, tomorrow.

Dr. R. H. Stone

Dr. Stone came to Lincoln Road after a pastorate of nearly ten years at Union Square Methodist Church in Baltimore. During the three years of his present ministry, there have been 95 baptisms of children and adults, and 255 members received by letter of transfer and profession of faith. The church property has many physical improvements, church furnishings, and a ten-room parsonage acquired at 99 Rhode Island avenue northeast.

After receiving his Bachelor of Divinity degree from Kimball School of Theology, and a degree in law from Willamette College of Law at Salem, Ore., Dr. Stone was admitted to the Oregon bar. In June, 1938, he received the degree of Doctor of Divinity at Taylor University, Upland, Ind. He entered the Baltimore Conference and served three years at Chatsworth M. E. Church, Baltimore, prior to his pastorate at Union Square.

Tomorrow, at the 11 o'clock hour, Dr. Stone will preach on "The Land of Beginning Again." At the 8 p. m. service the topic will be "The Sunset of a City."

Foundry. Children's Day will be featured by a pageant, "The Followers of the Star," in the dramatic hall at 9:30 a. m. Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, minister, will preach at 11 a. m. on "The Crown Jewels" and at 8 p. m. on "A Sheep and a Man."

At an informal song service at 8 p. m. the Rev. Mr. Rose preaches on "Dressing Lamps."

Union. Dr. John R. Edwards, pastor, will preach at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. on "Kings and the Kingdom." S. H. Breidenbach, church school superintendent, will be in charge of the Children's Day program at 9:30 a. m. Miss S. Clokey is chairman of program arrangements and Mrs. Albert director of music.

Petworth. The pageant, "God's Garden," will be presented by the children of the elementary division of the Sunday School at 10:30 a. m. as a Children's Day feature. The Girls' Choir will sing at the 8 o'clock service in Fellowship Hall and the young people will present the religious drama, "The Old Candle Maker of St. John's." Taking part in the drama will be Gene Otto, Jack Prichard, Mary Ellen Gearhart, Earl Webb, J. D. White, Marie Larnach, Isabelle Hewlett, Olive Rickard, Louise Berchfold, and Chester Crawford.

Emory. At Church School Day tomorrow at 11 o'clock the newly organized junior choir of 27 girls and 22 boys is making its first appearance in the new vestments of cream gold and royal purple. It is under the direction of C. Wilfred Smith, director of Emory Choirs. H. T. Waesche is superintendent of the Church School.

Dr. W. S. Abernethy to Mark 40 Years in the Ministry

Speaks Tomorrow At Calvary Baptist On 'Reminiscences'

The Rev. W. S. Abernethy, minister at Calvary Baptist Church, will preach tomorrow morning on "Reminiscences." He will have completed 40 years in the Christian ministry Monday, so the occasion will be observed at the morning service tomorrow.

Dr. Abernethy came to Washington in May, 1921, from the First Baptist Church of Kansas City, which he had served for nine years. The first 13 years of his ministry were spent in the Berwyn Baptist Church of Chicago.

Dr. and Mrs. Abernethy will leave the city tomorrow afternoon for Los Angeles, where they will attend the Northern Baptist Convention. Following this they will spend the summer vacation on the coast.

The Rev. Frank E. Johnston, jr., minister's assistant, in the evening will speak on "The Best Defense." He will be assisted by Miss Louise McKibben and Joseph Phillips.

DR. ABERNETHY

First. Dr. Edward H. Pruden, pastor, will preach on "The Shepherd of the Hills" at the 11 a. m. service, and on "The Sin of Being Lazy" at 8 p. m., one of his series on "Sins that Are Frequently Overlooked."

Takoma Park. In observance of Children's Day there will be a combined service of church and Sunday school at 10:30 in the morning. In the evening the Rev. William E. La Rue will give a sermon entitled, "That Mythical Man Smith."

The Ladies' Aid Society will hold its annual lawn fete on June 16, on the church lawn and will serve a dinner in the dining room from 5 to 7 p. m.

Bethesda First. "A Child's Message to Parents" will be the topic of a Children's Day address by Donald Walkley. The pastor, Dr. J. Raymond Nelson, will speak on "Happy Boys and Girls." His topic for the evening service at 8 p. m. will be "The Savior Seeking Lost Souls."

Metropolitan. Dr. John Compton Ball, pastor, will take as his evening sermon topic "Your Hope Chest for Time and Eternity—What Is in It?" He will present a bridal bouquet to the newest married couple in the audience.

Fifth. Dr. John E. Briggs, pastor, will preach at the 11 a. m. service on "Lessons from the Life of Young King Josiah" and at 7:45 p. m. on "Some Cures for Discouragement."

Children's Day will be observed throughout the Sunday School at 9:30 a. m. Following programs in the various departments the children will assemble and march into the church service at 11 a. m. at which time Dr. Briggs will conduct the morning service. Misses Elsie Bakersmith and Gloria Lochboeler will participate.

Church of the Week

Chillum Baptist Group Seeks Church Status

Born just one year ago last April 15, the Chillum Baptist Sunday School today is a thriving ecclesiastical youngster, hoping that when the next birthday rolls around its growth will have justified recognition as a church.

Mrs. L. O. Fox

"This has been a wonderful year for us," wrote Mrs. Laurence O. Fox, Sunday school superintendent, in a message published in the recently issued first annual report. One of the 24 charter members, she expressed appreciation to "each officer, teacher, scholar and helper for their cooperation."

Echoing Mrs. Fox's sentiments, the Rev. Charles J. Sheets, minister of the Sunday school, said that "we are all eager for the convention to soon permit formal recognition as a church."

Read before the District of Columbia Baptist Convention at East Washington Baptist Church some weeks ago, the following excerpts from the annual report reveal a graphic picture of the progress being made at Chillum.

Rev. C. J. Sheets

". . . The group voted we immediately join the Baptist Superintendents' Association. . . . Petworth Baptist Sunday School gave supplies, beginners' pins, tables and songbooks. . . . Special revival meetings were held for two weeks. . . . First prayer services were held September 22, 1938. . . . Baptist Young People's Union was formed on October 16. . . . Special programs were held on Mother's Day, Rally Day, Harvest Home Sunday, Christmas and Easter. . . . Bibles were awarded to 10 scholars for attendance. . . ."

The Sunday school was launched on Good Friday, April 15, 1938, at 5301 North Capitol street, in a house purchased by the District of Columbia Baptist Convention. Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, executive secretary of the convention, is one of the school's stanchest supporters.

Gathering for the organization meeting were the Rev. Henry J. Smith, pastor of Petworth Baptist "mother" Church; J. R. Krautz, his Sunday school superintendent; Dr. and Mrs. John E. Briggs, of Fifth Baptist Church, and many other Petworth workers.

Mr. Culberson

Still carrying on, the members who met on May 1, 1938, for the initial service are today's Chillum leaders and include Tate Culberson, president of the Baptist Young People's Union; the Rev. Mr. Sheets, Mrs. L. W. Dorsett, Jean Lee Dorsett, Clarence White, Mary Agnes White, Miss Mildred Ellett, Mrs. C. H. Brown, Morton Brown, Buddy Furrow, Miss Nellie Riddle, Julia Marie Riddle, L. O. Fox, W. E. Disney, jr., Mrs. Vesta Disney, Burton Manville, J. R. Comer, Barbara Comer, William I. Thompson and Miss Anna Belle Harrell.

Epiphany Will Be Host To Pythians

The District of Columbia Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias will hold a memorial service tomorrow at 8 p. m. in the Episcopal Church of the Epiphany.

The Rev. Duncan Fraser will preach at this service, at which there will be a special program by the choir.

The Rev. ZeBarney Phillips, rector, will officiate at graduation exercises and closing of the primary department and church school at 9:45, and will preach at the 11 a. m. service.

St. John's. The Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D.D., rector of St. John's Church, will preach by special request at the 11 a. m. service on "The Sevenfold Gifts of the Holy Spirit," as enumerated in the confirmation service.

There will be a celebration of Holy Communion at 8 a. m. and evening prayer will be said at 8 p. m. with an address by the Rev. Nathaniel C. Acton, curate.

The Rev. Richard Upsher Smith, one of four young deacons ordained last Sunday in Washington Cathedral by Bishop Freeman, will assist Dr. Hart, rector, at the celebration of Holy Communion at 8 a. m. tomorrow. He is the first candidate for holy orders to be presented from St. John's Parish in more than 100 years.

St. Paul's. The Rev. Charles W. Wood, new assistant minister at Rock Creek Parish, will be welcomed by the congregation at tomorrow's services, which also will mark a celebration of Flag Day. Services are set for 8:30 and 11 a. m., with Holy Communion at the earlier program.

Graduate of General Theological Seminary, New York City, where he was a classmate of the Rev. John S. Kromer, rector of Holy Comforter Chapel, and of Temple University, the Rev. Mr. Wood will supervise youth work at St. Paul's.

He is a native of Philadelphia, where he was active in young people's fellowship promotion, and spent one summer in mission work in the Adirondacks. While studying at the seminary, he served Grace Episcopal Church, Jamaica, Long Island, in a field capacity.

Our Saviour. At the 11 o'clock service the rector, the Rev. Alvin Lamar Wills, will speak on "Creative Power of Dreams and Visions."

All Saints. The Rev. Henry Teller Cocke will have as his theme for the morning service "God's Chosen."

The first of the Chevy Chase Union vesper services will be held on the church lawn, next Sunday, June 18, at 7 p. m.

Transfiguration. Short summer services will be at 7:30 and 11 a. m., with Sunday school at 9:30. The Rev. J. J. Queally will officiate and preach.

Bishop Freeman To Deliver G.W.U. Baccalaureate

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D.D., LL.D., will deliver the sermon at the baccalaureate service for the graduating class at George Washington University, to be held in Washington Cathedral tomorrow at 8 p. m.

The preacher at morning prayer will be Canon Anson Phelps Stokes who is to retire July 1 from the Cathedral staff. The Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, Ph.D., director of studies at the College of Preachers, will speak at the evening service at 4 o'clock.

Music for the 11 a. m. and 4 p. m. services will be furnished by the Cathedral choir of men and boys under the direction of Robert G. Barrow. Services for the day will begin with celebrations of Holy Communion in the Bethlehem Chapel at 7:30 and 9:30 a. m. The public portion of the Bishop's Garden, in which roses are in full bloom, will be open from noon until 2 p. m.

Christian Science Text for Tomorrow

"God The Preserver of Man" is the subject of the lesson-sermon in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow, at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. Sunday School is at 11 a. m.

The Golden Text is from Psalms 36:6, "Thy righteousness is like the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep: O Lord, thou preservest man and beast."

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." (Jeremiah 31:3)

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The relations of God and man, divine principle and idea, are indestructible in science; and science knows no lapse from nor return to harmony, but holds the divine order or spiritual law, in which God and all that He creates are perfect and eternal, to have remained unchanged in its eternal history." Little Stories about
GREAT HYMNS
"FROM GREENLAND'S ICY MOUNTAINS"
"Bishop Reginald Heber
"From Greenland's icy mountains,
From India's coral strand;
Where Afric's sunny fountains
Roll down their golden sand:
From many an ancient river,
From many a palmy plain,
They call us to deliver
Their land from error's chain."
"Bishop Heber is the author of this great missionary hymn. It was written in 1819 in response to a request by his father-in-law, Dean Shirley, for a suitable hymn to be sung at a missionary service. In just a few minutes he wrote this hymn which has since been a much loved missionary hymn of the church.

Hill Collapses After Jailing in $700,000Fraud

Pleads Guilty in Swindling of 400 Persons in This Area

Frank J. Hill, well groomed 52-year-old former broker, collapsed and was placed in the District jail infirmary last night after he was locked up to await sentence for stock frauds estimated to have cost 400 persons in this area $700,000.

Hill pleaded guilty before Justice Proctor yesterday to using the mails to defraud and to violating the securities act of 1933. He was caught in Philadelphia May 25, using the names of B. Edwin Lang and Robert E. Baker.

Hill was head of the firm of Crumpton & Co. here, until it was closed by an injunction in 1935. Hill left the District when the injunction was issued.

Edward R. Haigler, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, investigated the case, which led to the indictment on Hill. It was charged that the company persuaded holders of utility stock to trade their shares for preferred stock.

Assistant District Attorney Heflin told the court many small investors had lost their life savings. Hill did not resist his return from Philadelphia. Justice Proctor deferred sentence at the request of Attorney William H. Collins, who appeared for Hill.

Federal Economy Vital Issue, Says Senator Clark

Milwaukee, June 9 (AP).—Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri, asserted last night that no issue before the Nation today is more important than Government reorganization along economy lines.

At the 45th convention of the Wisconsin Bankers Association, he attacked the "mushrooming bureaucratic system" as the cause of much of the debt increase, and described the average Washington bureau as a flock of officials who, once on pay rolls, seek continually to increase the scope, appropriations, and personnel of their institution.

Orville Wright Flies Again After 10 Years

Dayton, Ohio, June 9 (AP).—Orville Wright, co-inventor of the airplane, took a plane ride today for the first time in ten years.

The trip was made in the DC-4 Douglas 42-passenger land plane. Because of an injury in a crash in 1908 Wright has not flown in recent years.

Queen Waves Good-by to Washington From Train

The end was written last night to the history making visit to Washington of Their Majesties King George and Queen Elizabeth. Aitchison, Splawn, Caskie to Serve in ICC Rate Group

Reassignment of work among the divisions and members of the Interstate Commerce Commision, announced Thursday, includes assignment of Commisioners Aitchison, Splawn and Caskie to Division Two, known as the rates, tariffs and valuation division. In yesterday's Post it was stated incorrectly that Commissioners Eastman, Porter and Lee had been placed in this division, which will enforce the long-and-short haul and tariff provisions and related matters, valuation of the property of the carriers and the standard time act. It also will have general supervision of informal complaints.

Commissioner Eastman was chosen chairman of the ICC after the chairmanship term had been increased from one year to three. He succeeds Chairman Caskie, who supported the change in length of term but refused to be considered for the longer period and voluntarily curtailed his own service as chairman by six months so Eastman will take the post July 1.

British Monarchs End Historic Visit

There the two couples greeted the dinner guests.

First to be received was Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the War President, who was a guest in Buckingham Palace in the stirring days of the peace conference. Next came the Speaker and Mrs. Bankhead.

Seated at the oval table was a strictly official gathering, 36 in the entire group, including Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull, and the retiring British Ambassador and Lady Lindsay, the latter of whom planned the party down to the final red rosebud decking the table.

Ancient Silver Graces Table

The dining table was decorated with bouquets of red roses in silver bowls, silver candelabra, and a mirrored centerpiece surrounded with a miniature gallery of intricately carved silver. Silver plate, several pieces of which were acquired during the reign of George IV and bear his cipher, was used on the polished table, which gleamed through the lace doilies that served as its only cover.

Seated to the right of the King was Mrs. Roosevelt. The President was on the right of the Queen, who was trimly turned out in a Victorian picture frock of deep rose.

Mrs. Roosevelt was gowned in mauve and green chiffon, made on flowing lines, and she wore a single diamond necklace.

After dinner the men in the company stayed at the table to smoke and then joined the ladies in the drawing room. A few minutes later President and Mrs. Roosevelt departed, and then Their Majesties left the company with Sir Ronald and Lady Lindsay, and went on to the smaller drawing room where they spent some time with members of the Embassy staff.

Hulls Bid Rulers Good-by

The royal party drove to the station after the dinner. Crowds lined the route, cheering them on their way.

Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull and George T. Summerlin, chief of protocol, were waiting in the station reception room. There they were joined by the royal party and went with them to the train. Hull and Sir Ronald walked with the King and Mrs. Hull and Lady Lindsay with the Queen.

Arriving at the train, Secretary and Mrs. Hull chatted for a minute or two, shook hands warmly, and said good-by. The Lindsays curtsied and bowed. The Queen was escorted up the steps of the coach, and the King followed.

3 Poison Killers Await Sentences

Philadelphia, June 9 (AP).—A special court of three judges began hearings today to determine the degree of guilt and fix punishment for three men who admitted a part in the sensational Eastern insurance murder plots.

The three are Ralph Polselli, Morris Bolber and Samuel Sortino.

Three judges also have under consideration an appeal from a verdict which condemned Herman Petrillo to die for the murder of Ferdinand Alfonsi.

Shipyards Grant 2,400 Pay Rises

Bath, Me., June 9 (AP).—Work on five Navy destroyers under construction in the Bath Iron Works' shipyards will be resumed Monday as the result of the management's agreement to increase wages for 2,400 workers after a 17-day dispute with the welding crew.

Federal Conciliator Stanley V. White said the management agreed to boost the total pay roll by about 5 per cent, establish wage classifications throughout the yard and promised to confer with the welders and other groups on demands for changed working conditions.

Ciano to Invite Spain Into Axis

Rome, June 9 (U.P.).—Diplomats said tonight Premier Mussolini intends to send his son-in-law and foreign minister, Count Ciano, to Madrid within two weeks in an effort to win Spain to the Italo-German military alliance.

Fascists, asserting Spain already is "indissolubly united" with the Rome-Berlin axis, said they believed Cianos' talks with Generalissimo Franco would mean that in event of war France would have hostile armies on three frontiers.

Sensible Neutrality

Under the able and vigorous leadership of its acting chairman, Sol Bloom, the House Foreign Affairs Committee has been whipping into shape a neutrality measure which deserves the widest Congressional support.

The bill, as it stands, is no cure-all. It cannot positively insure us against all future contingencies. No bill can do that. But the provisions already approved by the committee, plus those likely to win the assent of the majority, certainly do nothing to increase the danger of American involvement in the event of a European war.

What the bill, if enacted, would do is to prohibit American citizens from traveling on ships registered under the flags of belligerent states. It would authorize the President to proclaim areas of combat operations through which American nationals and vessels could not travel. And it would forbid loans and credits to belligerents as well as re-enacting the cash-and-carry provision which expired on May 1.

The latter provision and one or two others contained in the original bill, which reflects the views of Secretary Hull, have not yet been voted on by the committee. The presumption is, however, that they will also be approved. Indicative of the trend in the committee is the fact that efforts to amend the bill by the inclusion of an automatic embargo on arms, ammunition and implements of war, such as is found in the existing law, have been voted down.

In taking this position, the majority of the committee shows that it is unwilling to consider as valid the argument that the more rigid a neutrality law the United States has on the statute books, the less likely our involvement in an overseas conflict. Actually a rigid law, by indicating to the aggressors that this powerful Nation is unwilling to make the slightest distinction between them and the potential victims of their aggressions can help bring on the very danger it is designed to avert.

The greatest danger to America's peace arises out of the fact that in an interdependent world no nation is safe if the rest of the world is in flames. Thus any contribution this Nation can make toward the preservation of peace, and the maintenance by the United States of a relatively free hand is in line with both idealism and self-interest.

Good Work

The board of governors of the Federal Reserve System has just published a booklet on "The Federal Reserve System—Its Purposes and Functions," which is available for distribution to the public on request. To Bray Hammond and the staff of experts attached to the board great credit is due for an exceptionally lucid and authoritative account of what the system is and what it does. Unlike so many publications of recent vintage turned out by the Government printing presses, this book does not conceal propagandistic aims beneath a surface appearance of objectivity. Nor does it attempt to pass judgment upon controversial issues.

What emerges is an unusually objective exposition, combining clarity of thought with simplicity of expression. However, good judgment has been shown in avoiding the kind of over-simplification that distorts facts and relationships by trying to make difficult subjects understandable to the wholly untrained mind. As explained in a foreword, the reserve board study is neither a primer nor an exhaustive treatise; it is midway between these extremes, being designed to fit the needs of students, bankers and businessmen.

A review of the chapter headings shows that this small volume deals with banking problems and policies of immediate concern to the American people. The discussion of the function of bank reserves, the causes of their expansion and contraction and their composition, will bring enlightenment to many readers who have only a vague knowledge of the connection between such reserves and credit policy.

If there is anywhere a hint of special pleading in the book, it is to be found in frequent references to the limitations imposed by law and by circumstances upon the powers of the Federal reserve authorities. They can, it is said, "create credit when it is in demand, they can encourage the demand for it by making funds abundant and cheap, they can create deposits by open market purchases of securities from others than member banks; but they cannot create a demand for credit or cause the created deposits to be actively used."

While this statement provides the reserve board with a defense against critics, it is nevertheless a recital of limitations that have to be reckoned with in formulating credit policies.

The Path Of Friendship

After two days which Washington will long remember, the National Capital has yielded its royal guests to New York. The welcome of that metropolis may be more noisy, and superficially more imposing. It cannot be more heartfelt than was that of the District of Columbia.

Sometimes regarded as an indifferent or even cynical community, Washington on Thursday and Friday showed that it can be as sentimental as any unsophisticated village. To say that the King and Queen were received here with open arms would be an understatement. It was into the hearts of the population that they were taken, and taken without reservation.

There is always risk in sentimentality. There is risk that those who exhibit it may find that they have spent their emotions for an unworthy cause. Washington, sharing the generosity of Americans along with other national virtues and defects, did not stop to calculate the risk. And the city has a profound conviction that it was not and will not be let down.

King George and Queen Elizabeth, we were told in advance, are a modest, unassuming and friendly pair anxious only to do their difficult job in a constructive way. Washington knows now that this report was true, and knows also that to their essential decency and sincerity the royal couple add charm and the simplicity of bearing which is the most dignified of all human characteristics. Whether king or commoner, those are the qualities that make men royal.

From the British viewpoint, of course, the essential purpose of the visit is the furtherance of Anglo-American goodwill. That the attainment of this rather intangible aim is in the British advantage cannot be questioned. It does not follow that the objective involves anything to the disadvantage of the United States.

Western civilization has slipped dangerously in recent years. Even here in sheltered America we have seen enough to realize what the threatened tailspin may involve. There is an increasingly clear realization that it is time to turn our talents toward improving relations with others, whether they be near and dear, or distant and personally unknown. There is a growing desire to substitute goodwill for illwill wherever such positive action can ease the tensions and lubricate the frictions of modern life.

The British people, we know, have similar feelings. Because they have been brushed more closely by the shadow of disaster this desire for friendship is perhaps even more pronounced in England. And of the will to be more friendly, in all that splendid word implies, the visit of the King and Queen is part and parcel. They came to demonstrate friendship. Because men live by friendship they have been well received.

There is no desire and there is no need for any alliance between Great Britain and the United States. Any effort in that direction would arouse more mistrust than it could ever remove, would do far more harm than good. But there is both desire and need for people whose interests and ideals are largely identical to work and think and live cooperatively. For only thus, in the community of the home or the community of the world, can there be the contentment, the peace and the steadfast progress which humanity craves.

As fellow pilgrims on that uphill road where all of us are jumbled the King and Queen have passed through Washington. The brief commingling has been good for them and good for us. It has already done much to fulfill the prayer which His Majesty voiced at the White House on Thursday night:—"that our great nations may ever in the future walk together along the path of friendship in a world of peace."

Sir Max

It is commonly believed that one unfortunate indiscretion cost the late Rudyard Kipling his chance of a knighthood.

If that is true, then there is a fine magnanimity—or else a very sly humor—in the inclusion of the name of Max Beerbohm in the birthday honors list of King George VI. More than a dozen years ago the incomparable Max caused much distress at Windsor by an exhibition of drawings in which he satirized, among other things, the royal distribution of titles. The drawings were afterward withdrawn.

Max Beerbohm, now 67 and living these many years in retirement at Rapallo, is one of the few survivors of that clever and slightly picaresque group of young men who broke into attention in the 1890's through the pages of Henry Harland's Yellow Book. But unlike so many of the others, Max's was no brief candle. Possibly he owes this more to his drawings than to his prose. From the time of the publication of "Caricatures of Twenty-five Gentlemen" in 1896 until the middle 1920's Max was at once the delight and terror of literary and political celebrities. His pictures are not without an urbane malice, but he scored so many palpable hits that his victims could only nurse their wounds in secret or feign to join the laughter.

One of Max's favorite devices in his later drawings has been to confront the subject of the caricature with the ghost of himself when young. But since he has never hesitated to caricature himself, it will be interesting to see what the waggish Max Beerbohm of yesterday has to make of the dignified Sir Max Beerbohm of tomorrow.

The Housing Bill

Before passing Senator Wagner's amendment to the United States housing act, the Senate manifested a deep interest in slum clearance and considerable antagonism toward ventures designed merely to rehouse low-income groups. There was no opposition to reasonable use of Federal funds to wipe out living conditions that endanger the health and morals of the people. So long as the USHA scrupulously restricts its activities to this field, there seems to be little danger that its useful work will be cut off.

Some skepticism was expressed, however, as to whether the USHA is confining its aid to "plain, simple homes for the people who live in the slums." Such sponsors of the slum reclamation movement as Senator Walsh refrained from passing judgment on the USHA program, since none of its projects is complete. But he issued a warning that the whole undertaking would be in danger if the primary objective of eliminating slums were lost to sight.

Other Senators severely criticized the granting of Federal subsidies which they believe to be exorbitant. Senator Tydings, for example, complained that the USHA is contracting to grant cities annual subsidies that will pay off the entire cost of the housing projects they develop. But the great majority of Senators seem to have concluded that the policy inaugurated by the housing act is highly desirable; that it is as yet too early to pass mature judgment upon what the USHA is doing, and that the results to date are sufficiently favorable to justify extension of that agency's lending powers.

Similar conclusions have been drawn by many informed citizens. Fortunately, the USHA has made considerable progress in reducing the cost per dwelling of projects it is assisting, as indicated by the estimates for the last group of projects that have been authorized. This is a promising achievement which will doubtless be carried further as the housing authority gains more experience.

Subsidies granted by the authority, however, are much too high, in spite of these lower costs. If the Senate bill is enacted, the USHA will be able to obligate the Government to payment of $73,000,000 annually in rent subsidies for the next 60 years. And this obligation assures only a good start toward the abolition of the country's slums. When Congress is next confronted by the question of continuing this work, it will have to meet the subsidy issue with more candor and understanding than the Senate manifested this week.

The USHA program is just getting under way. Thus it seems particularly unwise to launch rural housing experiments which must necessarily be developed along very different lines from the urban projects now authorized. Even if the amendment for this purpose offered by Senator Wagner were desirable in itself, the method of its adoption would make it suspect. Knowing that the Senate had agreed to vote on the bill at 3 p. m., the Senator introduced his amendment about five minutes before debate was cut off. Unless the amendment can be more fully analyzed by the House and recast in more definite terms, it ought to be defeated as a matter of course.

A Bostonian called the police department and reported that a book agent was up a tree in his yard annoying his bulldog.

"The Department of the Interior has ruled that honey bees are not livestock."—Now that this matter has been cleared up, let's hope that general conditions will improve.

Missing Ingredient

W. K. Kelsey in the Detroit News.

Suppose that the three pages of manuscript discovered by Dr. Robin Flower, of the British Museum, are proved to be in Shakespeare's handwriting, what does it mean? That Shakespeare wrote "Hamlet," or that he was merely doing hackwork on an old play about Sir Thomas More?

We know that Shakespeare was an actor. Many an actor has rewritten an old play; one doesn't have to be a consummate playwright to do that. So what if the handwriting is Shakespeare's?

The best proof that other men who are supposed by some to have written Shakespeare's plays didn't write them is that the writings they did compose do not exhibit the genius of the dramas. The idea that the man who wrote Bacon's Essays could have written "Macbeth" or, more to the point, "Romeo and Juliet" or "Much Ado About Nothing," is as fanciful as that the moon and stars are illuminated by the Detroit Edison Co.

Disappointed

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the Baltimore Sun newspaper, I noticed an excerpt saying that far too little consideration has been given to three internal enemies, which, as Surgeon General Parran has pointed out, would be lined up against this country in case of war. Those enemies are tuberculosis, venereal disease and malnutrition.

By way of comment, I will point out that I believe nearly every government on earth, except that of Germany, is bothering entirely too much about what other countries are doing and not bothering nearly enough about conditions in their own countries. And, I haven't been able to make up my mind yet as to whether the head of the German government is doing so much for his people because he loves them, or because he wants to have all of them on his side when he gets ready to grab off a few more countries.

Maybe you will call this a sour note. It is so intended. I have been sadly disappointed at what our so-called New Deal Government has done toward eliminating poverty and misery in this country.

War Debts

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his letter to you dated Boston, May 26, and appearing in your issue of June 4, Mr. George S. Parker states: "We issued and sold bonds to our citizens and others to send money overseas." It is extraordinary how Mr. Parker and others overlook the very crux of this problem of either national debts. We did not send money overseas! We sent supplies, and debtors have offered to replace these supplies, but naturally our farmers and manufacturers would not welcome them!

If our debtors could corral all the gold in the world, which at present we have not, and send it to us (it's about the book value of the debts), what would we do with it? Bury it with our stock now in Kentucky? And if they sent it to us we would be ruined, for there would be too little gold in the world left to balance exchanges and the world would be forced to seek another medium of exchange, and we would have practically all the gold in the world—mostly buried in the ground! And that's why our debtors haven't paid us in gold! S. R. BARBOUR.

Palestine

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of May 31 Mr. M. B. Shaber asserted that the attempt to make Palestine a Jewish state is similar to Ireland's struggle for democracy and self-government. With all due respect to Mr. Shaber, I wish to point out that the cases of Ireland and Palestine are not at all similar.

Palestine has been an Arab state for centuries, with a very small Jewish population. Since the end of the World War the Jews have been attempting, through subsidized immigration, to make Palestine what it was 2,000 years ago, a Jewish state. In other words, the Jewish problem is one of repopulating Palestine with Jews. Should they succeed, the Arabs would be reduced to a minority in the land which they have regarded as their own for centuries.

Ireland, on the other hand, although invaded and occupied by the British, has always remained Irish; there is no problem involving repopulation. Scandinavian, English, Scottish, and Welsh immigrants have been assimilated by the Celtic population. In fact, Tone, Emmett, Parnell, Pearse, Clarke, and De Valera have been among the many Irish patriots who have carried in their veins strains of non-Gaelic blood.

Ireland's situation has been that of Belgium in 1914 and Czechia and Slovakia in 1939. Just as Germany invaded and occupied Belgium, Czechia and Slovakia, so did England invade and occupy Ireland. All that Ireland has ever demanded has been the withdrawal of British forces so that the Irish people might establish democratic institutions and self-government in the country which they have never relinquished to any foreign invader. In Ireland no distinction is made between Gael and non-Gael; all are Irish.

Warm Reception

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The account of the royal visit in the Province of Quebec by certain magazines was not only misleading to its readers but most insulting to the French-Canadians, and it is questionable whether the average fair-minded American really relished the ridicule—I am inclined to think not and I can truthfully say that our English-Canadians, who are in a position to judge, certainly did not.

The absence of the wild cheering on sighting our sovereigns at first can be clearly explained by my own sentiments. The stately Empress floating slowly into port with its royal escort along with the private yachts that had gone out to greet it, the fact that Their Majesties were actually on Canadian soil and the thought of what they actually represented was most awe-inspiring and seemed too sacred to give vent to shouting. We were more inclined to bow in reverence, which I think is the most sincere and loyal mark of welcome. Yes, we French-Canadians are a reserved people and are happy to pay homage to our King in our own "quaint" way.

Being privileged in securing a place directly in front of the balcony at the Windsor Hotel in Montreal, I can truly state that both the King and Queen were deeply moved at the ovation given them, making three balcony appearances between the courses at the civic banquet. This demonstration of loyalty was not boisterous or crude in any way and Their Majesties did not hide the tears that filled their eyes.

That the good old "U. S. hail-fellowship" was lacking in both Quebec and Montreal is a relief to us and can hardly be considered a befitting greeting to the head of any government and much less a monarch. It will also be noted that Their Majesties made bi-lingual speeches in Ottawa, and since it was not necessary for Her Majesty to speak in both English and French is proof enough that they were fully cognizant of the loyalty of the French-Canadians and evidently were aware of the fact that a good majority of the crowd in Ottawa was from both Montreal and Quebec, having taken advantage of the excursions for the occasion.

The redeeming feature about the whole thing is that knowing the American Nation as I do, they must be very indignant about such disparaging and unfounded statements and are certainly above petty jealousy, predominantly illustrated in the articles mentioned.

Replace Alcatraz

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The statement of Attorney General Murphy regarding the deleterious conditions he found at Alcatraz—commonly called America's Devils Island—sheds authoritative light on what the public has suspected for a long time.

Fear of "that place of horror" may have had much to do with the decrease in Federal crimes, especially kidnaping across State lines, during the past two or three years; nevertheless, the science of penology as it is practiced today should not countenance inhuman mental treatment any more than it does physical torture of criminals.

Mr. Murphy would like to have the Alcatraz prisoners rehabilitated partly through some form of outdoor life instead of many of them becoming "stir crazy" which, because of close confinement owing to the island's small area, tends to affect their minds.

I trust enlightened public opinion will take up the plea of the Attorney General for removing the Alcatraz convicts to as safe a place better suited to their mental and physical rehabilitation than San Francisco Bay. GUY d'AULBY.

Washington's Milk Purest Possible

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Washington is supplied with the purest milk of any city in the world. I believe no one denies this important fact. According to the records of the D. C. Health Department, the average bacteria count in milk shipped into Washington was about 22,000,000 per cubic centimeter in 1900 and about 10,000,000 in 1910. In contrast, during the period for which I have a record in 1938 and 1939, the average bacteria count in the raw milk from my own small dairy farm, as delivered to the dealer in Washington, has been only 3,370 per cubic centimeter. For every few thousand bacteria in the unregulated milk there is now in my milk only one lone bacterium.

This truly marvelous achievement is accomplished only by the expenditure of much money and labor and the scrupulous and intelligent observance of the many rigorous and effective regulations of the D. C. Health Department. It requires a herd every cow of which is healthy in every respect and fastidious cleanliness with respect to the cows, the dairy barn, the dairy house and all utensils. It requires a steam boiler, a sterilizer and a refrigeration plant by means of which the milk is kept near the freezing temperature from a few minutes after it leaves the cow until it is delivered to the dealer in Washington.

When the present rigorous regulations were put into effect, most of the farmers who shipped milk to Washington were greatly worried. Some were not able to meet the requirements and some voluntarily decided to quit. Most of those who continued to ship milk into Washington went further into debt, some of them to the limit of their capacity to borrow, in order to provide the required dairy barns, dairy houses, sterilizers, refrigerators and other equipment.

The price of milk has been sufficient to enable these farmers to meet their interest and upkeep expenses and to make a modest living—no more. If the sanitary regulations are now removed for distant producers the investment of the Maryland and Virginia farmers will be lost, many of them will be financially ruined, the Federal Land Bank will be in trouble, and business will be generally demoralized in the dairy sections.

The people of Washington may get slightly cheaper milk, but it will not be the wholesome milk they are getting now. O. E. MEINZER.

House In The Country

Assorted strange creations began to appear in the milliners' windows, and we knew it was spring. In a couple of weeks the trees corroborated, bursting like fountains into green mist. We looked at both the hats and the trees once each, bought a spring outfit and wore it to do the same things we had been doing summer, fall and winter. The last five odd springs slipped by that way without our noticing, and summer was just a season to be endured. And every year, like thousands of other pale-faced apartment dwellers, on Sundays we would gaze wistfully upon whatever bit of flower or verdure offered and say to each other, "Wouldn't it be wonderful to have a place in the country! Just a little place, you know, where we could be out-of-doors."

But spring followed spring and we did nothing about it, except perhaps to wonder sometimes why spring was so much shorter than it used to be. We never stopped to think that then we paid some attention to spring—went and picked swamp violets, for instance, or walked in the woods when the snow was starting to melt and noted the first beginnings of the buds. But now "the world was too much with us" and we could not muster the energy to break off our way of life, the everyday routine built up in insidious small bits until we couldn't remember how we had become city people.

"Summer Rental," the ad said and pried us loose. "All the ancient inconveniences freshly painted and papered." It was pouring the day we first saw the house—a bright yellow plain-jane house of the school of architecture generally associated with hillbillies. Ours, however, has been kept in sturdy repair and wears its hundred-odd years jauntily. All around was dripping countryside, dripping cows, dripping red barn, dripping trees and bedraggled birds chirping sadly from under the leaves. But our freshly painted and papered inconvenient little farmhouse charmed us even in that weather. A garden plot of about a quarter of an acre was already plowed and waiting the ministrations of whatever amateur farmer happened along. The pump in the back yard yielded some of the earth's sweetest water, and the iris were just blossoming along the fence.

Our only modern conveniences are running water (to a sink and a tub) and electricity; we have an old-fashioned icebox, a kerosene stove and no telephone. Our friends were full of helpful suggestions concerning traditional ways to disguise a certain ancient inconvenience in the far rear. L., tradition breaker extraordinary, spurning trellises and hollyhocks, made an artful arrangement of a sawhorse, one log of wood and a second-hand saw and dubbed it the woodshed.

Our closest neighbors are five frisky heifers, a tailless cat who lives in the red barn, two farm horses, gentlemen of leisure, who amble around like privileged characters, and one red and yellow rooster who holds some sort of responsible position thereabouts which keeps him patrolling the landscape from 5 a. m. on. Across the lane there is a field of grain which waves interminably in the wind. At night thousands of fireflies flicker over it as if to imitate the stars, which we see once again clearly without the adulteration of electric signs and street lights. Roses, honeysuckle and blackberry bushes bloomed the second week we were there, and before long our herbs will be up to add their perfume to our symphony of fragrances.

A tolerant lady in the seed store gave us explicit directions about planting and soon peas and corn and beets and potatoes were popping up in the garden. L. came home with a terrifying pamphlet from the Department of Agriculture listing just what disasters might be expected to befall the vegetables. Like a medical student experiencing every symptom of the disease he is currently studying, L. endowed our plants with actinomyces-scabies, bacterium-phaseoli, bean beetle, leaf spot and measles. He would wake up in the middle of the night to announce, "I know what's got those carrots; it's macrosporium-carrotae!" In spite of which, they are all growing apace, and we are now wondering what we are going to do with an estimated crop of 500 tomatoes. But we know at last what it is to be a farmer, even on a small scale: How you scan the skies for rain and watch the storm pass by a mile or so away, how you blister your hands and break your nails and sprain your back hoeing, how you go out at 10 o'clock at night with a flashlight and a bucket full of soapsuds to spray the tomato plants attacked by aphids, and how in a day or so you see them revived with as much elation as if they were old friends of yours. Never again will we be able to go into a grocery and order a pound of tomatoes with our usual abandon.

There must be a drawback to all this, but we haven't found it yet. At first we thought the whip-poor-will (there seems to be only one in the neighborhood) was going to be "it." Our sole acquaintance with whip-poor-wills was limited to the line of a song which goes, "When whip-poor-wills call and evening is nigh." We were under the impression that whip-poor-wills called once or possibly twice an evening and had done. When whip-poor-wills call, we found, they do no half-way job, but go on calling, hardly pausing for breath, far into the night in a kind of lame dactyl, an accent contrary to our preconceived notions and therefore annoying. But we're used to him, now; in fact, we're rather fond of him, and have begun a minor research project to discover whether when he does pause for breath in midsong, say, on "poor," does he take up on "will" or start anew with "whip?" This will be our contribution to irrelevancy while civilization decides whether or not it will fall.

Big-Ring Battle

By Mark Sullivan

Roosevelt vs. Garner

LOOKING TOWARD the Democratic Presidential nomination, there are two major movements. A member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet, Mr. Harold Ickes, has said publicly and forcefully that the President ought to have a third term. And friends of Vice President Garner have said positively that his name will go before the convention. These two movements are major. Mr. Roosevelt is the symbol of the New Deal wing of the party in power. Mr. Garner is the symbol of the orthodox Democratic wing.

Besides these, there are minor movements. A formal movement for former Gov. McNutt of Indiana has been under way for some time. In various States the local Democratic organization is preparing to send delegates to the convention instructed for some local Democratic leader, a Senator or a Governor, as a "favorite son." But all these smaller movements are for the present comparatively negligible. Whether any of these minor movements ever amounts to anything is dependent on the outcome of the big-ring battle between the New Dealers, symbolized by Mr. Roosevelt, and the orthodox Democrats, symbolized by Mr. Garner.

Let us discuss this major battle as if it went on to the end in the form in which it now is—that is, with Mr. Roosevelt contending for the nomination as head of the New Deal wing of the party, Mr. Garner contending as head of the orthodox Democratic wing. Let us assume that a year from today, on the eve of the Democratic National Convention, the situation has narrowed down to a clear-cut, simple political duel between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Garner.

New Dealers' Action Would Be Puzzle

IN SUCH a situation, who would be the better candidate for the Democrats to nominate? By "better candidate" is meant the one who, in the general election against the Republican nominee, would get the larger vote. Which, as between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Garner, would make the better campaign against the Republicans?

To answer this question we must consider what would be the course of the followers of the defeated candidate! For example, suppose Mr. Roosevelt wins. In that event, what would the followers of the defeated Mr. Garner do? Most of them no doubt would vote the regular ticket, for Mr. Roosevelt. But there would be an aggrieved group, made up of strongly conservative Democrats, who would bitterly dislike to support Mr. Roosevelt. To such, there would be an easy course. They would have a place to go. They could vote the Republican ticket and satisfy their conservatism.

But suppose the outcome were the other way—suppose Mr. Garner won the nomination. What would the New Dealers do? Most of the New Dealers—those who are Democrats first and New Dealers afterward—would support Mr. Garner. But what course would be open to the extreme New Dealers? Specifically, for example, what would Mr. Thomas Corcoran do, or Mr. Harry Hopkins? Or the body of extreme New Deal voters who are symbolized by Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Corcoran. What would these do? What would be open to them? They certainly would find no satisfaction in voting the Republican ticket. To vote for the Republican candidate for President would be less satisfactory than voting for Mr. Garner, much as they may disapprove Mr. Garner.

Middle-Of-Road Man More Probable

ANY EXTREME New Dealer, in his present state of excited emotion, may vow that never on God's footstool will he vote for John Garner. But this extreme New Dealer neglects to anticipate what would be his position after Mr. Garner is nominated. Political leaders anticipate this, however, and know that after the extreme New Dealer's emotion has died down, and he sees as his only alternatives Mr. Garner and a Republican, he will conclude, in many cases, to vote for Mr. Garner. In short, the political leaders who will have much to do with the Democratic National Convention, may reasonably anticipate that they could nominate Mr. Garner and still hold most of the New Deal voters to the Democratic Party.

It may be said that voting the Republican ticket is not the only alternative open to a New Dealer disgruntled by the nomination of Mr. Garner. It may be said that the extreme New Dealers would vote for a third party. But suppose they do. They will merely be helping to elect the Republican candidate. A New Deal vote for a third party would be almost as effective a help to the Republicans as a direct vote for the Republican Party.

All that is said here is merely this: that the Democratic Party leaders would lose fewer voters by nominating Mr. Garner than by nominating Mr. Roosevelt. It is not intended to imply that either Mr. Garner or Mr. Roosevelt will be nominated. The greater probability is the nominee will be some middle-of-the-road man upon whom both the orthodox Democrats and the New Dealers can reasonably agree.

The Axis' Strategic Position

By Stephen King-Hall.

Could It Fight A Prolonged War?

Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

SINCE WE are admittedly living in such an acute state of power politics that our Prime Minister has expressed the opinion that though we may not be at war, we are certainly not at peace, it is not out of place to consider the position of the axis powers of Germany and Italy from the point of view of strategy.

If, instead of Herr Hitler, there were a mediocrity at the head of the German government, strategical questions would decide whether there was going to be peace or war. Herr Hitler is not a figurehead, whatever else he may be, and experience has shown us that in some respects his actions are incalculable. Nevertheless, when it comes to war, strategical factors cannot be ignored, nor can they be altered by any amount of wishful thinking by Herr Hitler. He can shut his eyes to their implications, but they will find him out in due course.

THE FIRST THING to remember is that if the axis powers decide to go to war, which means, in effect, if Herr Hitler acts aggressively, and makes the mistake of thinking we are bluffing, it will be a totalitarian war. It will be a war in which all the resources of all the belligerents will be engaged.

It is an accepted fact that at the present time the available resources of Germany, both human and material, are in full productivity. There is indeed a shortage of labor in the Reich and the authorities are having the greatest difficulty in avoiding inflation.

The only possible way of increasing production of armaments in Germany would be still further to reduce the standard of living. It would almost certainly be possible to effect this reduction if it were accompanied by adequate propaganda, but there is not much of a margin left between the present level of subsistence and the minimum necessary to keep the people in good health.

FURTHERMORE, it is also the opinion of all the authorities who have studied this subject that though Germany has made the most tremendous efforts to become self-sufficing, she is still, and must remain, a long way off the 100 per cent mark. There are many commodities essential in modern war which Germany can never produce for herself, and for these she must rely on reserves. Even if we assume that in time of war she would be able to control the Danube Valley and large areas of Central Europe, this would alleviate, but not solve, her food problem.

As a matter of fact, the absorption of Czecho-Slovakia, though it has given her a store of arms and a good deal of machinery in armaments works, has been a liability in other directions, since Czecho-Slovakia was a state whose economic structure was designed to produce a big line of exports.

The question of oil is vital in modern war. It has been estimated that Germany might require as much as 20,000,000 tons a year. The Rumanian oil fields even if they were not destroyed before Germany could seize them, would not go far to meet this demand, and the transport problem would be enormous. All these considerations are based on the assumption that in time of war Germany would be subjected to the pressure of a naval blockade, and that Russia would not be on the side of the axis powers.

So far as the blockade is concerned, the naval superiority of the Western powers over the axis powers is overwhelmingly strong, and has been still further increased by the agreement with Turkey. This agreement insures that the control of the Dardanelles is in the hands of the anti-aggression group, and it also provides the British fleet with much-needed bases in the eastern Mediterranean.

NO MATTER from which angle one examines the matter, one reaches the conclusion that Germany is singularly badly situated for a prolonged struggle. The truth is that in doing what she has done in five years to restore her armed strength, she has used up much of her reserves and is now—before the war has begun—in a state comparable to that which she was in during the year 1917; that is to say, not exhausted, but at the peak of her effort.

LOOKING AT the other end of the axis, one sees Italy so hopelessly situated from the strategic point of view that it is difficult to imagine that any Italian who knows the facts can contemplate war without the gravest misgivings. The economic situation is poor, the troops in Libya are entirely dependent on sea communication for their supplies. They would either have to fight their way into Egypt or Tunisia, or else perish miserably. Tunisia is crammed with French troops, and as a member of the French general staff remarked: "If the Italians attack Egypt, we will follow them up with 100,000 men and push them into the Suez Canal."

In case of need a Turkish army could easily reinforce the British troops in Egypt. Abyssinia is a hostage to fortune on the wrong side of the Suez Canal. Mussolini's brave words at Turin about a block of 150,000,000 people extending from the Baltic to the Indian Ocean may sound well to an excited crowd, but they are ludicrous when examined from the strategical point of view. The Turin audience would have done well to remember that the whole Italian coast is open to attack; that the Italian industries are concentrated in the north in the triangle Milan-Turin-Genoa, and that this area is close to French aerodromes.

THE STATE of affairs outlined above may be summed up as follows: Germany would start any war handicapped by three serious strategical difficulties, firstly, she starts very near to her maximum strength and would soon feel the effects of a blockade which would be 90 per cent effective from the first day of war; secondly, Germany would have a weak and exposed ally in the shape of Italy, whose offensive powers would be negligible; thirdly, the development of the anti-aggressior pacts means that Germany is faced with a war on two fronts, the nightmare of the German general staff.

In these circumstances, the only hope of victory for the axis powers lies in winning the war within three months. Some people—including, so it is rumored, Herr Hitler—believe that such a victory can be achieved by air-action. There was perhaps a slight chance in September, 1938, that Great Britain could have been dealt a smashing and decisive blow from the air. That chance has passed forever, but it would be foolish to suppose, that, faced with the choice between attempting a hopeless gamble or reversing his policy, Herr Hitler will not try the gamble.

That is why it is so desperately urgent to take far-reaching steps to make the truth known to the German people. We must have a ministry of information.

10,000 Polish Jews Must Leave Reich Or Be Interned

Berlin, June 9 (AP).—East Prussian Jews and thousands of others scattered throughout Germany who have been ordered to leave or go to concentration camps, appealed to their leaders in Berlin tonight for help in finding homes outside this nation.

The Jewish leaders, who have been working at top speed for months in efforts to get visas, said they were practically powerless to act except in a small number of instances.

Transports of Polish Jews, more than 10,000 of whom have been given written notices to depart within time limits of from a few hours to four weeks, continued today to be organized by police.

Heart Disease Found Increasing

Deaths due to coronary occlusion (blockage of the main artery to the heart) increased 126 per cent between 1933 and 1937 in Philadelphia, according to a report by Dr. O. F. Hedley, of the Public Health Service, made public yesterday.

Acute coronary occlusion is more common among city dwellers than farm people. Sedentary occupations are a predisposing factor. Moderation in food, play, work and drink, avoidance of violent exercise and periodic heart examinations of individuals over 40 are the best precautions, commended by Dr. Hedley.

Widow of Squalus Victim Pensioned

A monthly pension of $29 has been granted Mrs. Jeannette Maude Priester, of 1322 Eleventh street southeast, widow of Alfred Charles Priester, seaman who perished on the submarine Squalus, it was announced yesterday by Charles E. Weickhardt, national naval liaison officer of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The decision to award Mrs. Priester the pension was made by the Veterans' Administration less than a week after she filed claim.

Thoughts On Ickes

SOME PERSONS have been unkind enough to suggest that Harold Ickes' proposal of a third term for Mr. Roosevelt was made for selfish reasons. If the New Deal were turned out, a horde of political derelicts would be seen thumbing their way out of Washington and men and women who now enjoy more or less importance and power would be one with the repudiated patriots of the Hoover Administration.

There are so many of them that they might even form a pressure group to hold annual conventions, lobby for a bonus and march on the Capital flaunting their clipping books as reminders of the years when they toiled to save the Nation. Some, no doubt, would obtain medical certificates and appeal for rated disability for internal ills incurred in engagements above and beyond the call of duty in the cocktail room of the Mayflower Hotel.

But Mr. Ickes would not be among them. In the first place, Mr. Ickes is not poor, and it is unjust to him to think that he could not continue to make at least as much in private life as he now receives from the Treasury.

Would Miss Power As New Deal Chief

HE COULD TURN to radio, run a detective agency and become a newspaper columnist. Mr. Ickes has talent, energy and a ravenous appetite for public attention, and it is incorrect to suppose that the country would have heard the last from him if he were voted out. He probably would be able to run his earnings up well beyond $100,000 a year, and a cigarette testimonial from him would be worth $10,000 of any agency's money. True, he does not smoke cigarettes and has disparaged them, but Red Grange also was a non-smoker who had voiced hygienic objections. And must a rich, aristocratic lady, accustomed all her life to servants, roll up her sleeves and make her own biscuits to qualify as an authority on baking powder?

It is said, also, that Mr. Ickes would miss the power which he enjoys as Secretary of the Interior and the little Joe Goebbels of the New Deal. That doubtless is true, and he would miss the magnificence of an office big enough for a bowling alley and reminiscent of the stories of Mussolini's vast hall in which callers lose their poise while walking the long mile from the door to the personage at the desk.

Not Indifferent To Profit Motive

A FRUGAL MAN and not indifferent to the profit motive in his own affairs, as distinguished from the affairs of others, he would miss certain petty luxuries, too, but most of all he would hate to be licked after the one success of his life. He is devoted to Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal to such an extent that he is willing to cramp or shrink democracy in particulars which he considers unessential to make it work in parts which he considers to be vital.

He is a born sorehead, and although he is a naturalized Democrat, having been a Stateless or Nansen sort of Republican for years, he always nagged and pestered and scuffed for reform during his years in Chicago. He took out his first papers as a Democrat only when Mr. Roosevelt came along. Like the naturalized German leader of the anti-American bund, he has tried to disqualify many who were there while he was an alien fighter for Charles Evans Hughes.

Quarrelsome But Runs Office Well

MR. ICKES would miss the power of office, but mostly because he thinks he is exercising that power for the good of the masses of the people, as distinguished from the Nation. I think he puts the people ahead of the Nation in his feelings or believes that the Nation will be all right if the people prosper.

He is ornery, inexact, reckless and inconsistent, and his dislike of journalism I attribute to rancor because he tried the newspaper business and did not make the varsity. But the fact remains that the country would miss his ability as much as he would miss the job. He loses some appreciation by reason of his partisan quarrelsomeness in matters that are not the business of his deparment. But his job is that of Secretary of the Interior, and will someone name a better one, offhand?

Hitler's Headache

By Barnet Nover

Czecho-Slovakia—Three Months Later

IN HIS REICHSTAG speech of April 28, 1939, Chancellor Hitler found it necessary to devote no less than a third of his time to an elaborate but far from convincing defense of the destruction of Czecho-Slovakia's independence six weeks earlier.

It was by this time obvious to him that this act of international brigandage was proving no undiluted gain for the Third Reich.

By seizing Bohemia and Moravia and transforming Slovakia into a German protectorate, Germany had secured some very real, if temporary, advantages. There was, for instance, the not inconsiderable Czech gold reserve which, after the occupation of Prague, was shipped to Berlin to replenish the shrinking exchequer of the Nazi regime. There was also the magnificent Czech military equipment—airplanes, tanks, rifles, heavy and light artillery—sufficient to outfit perhaps 50 additional German divisions.

The loot also included many fine factories, well-kept forests, great munitions plants—such as Skoda—some useful mineral and agricultural resources and a hard-working and skillful population that could ease Germany's stringent labor shortage. And last, but by no means least, there were the enormous strategic advantages to be derived from a further extension of the German boundary to Poland's southern flank.

THESE ITEMS were on the credit side of the German ledger, so far as the destruction of Czecho-Slovakia's independence was concerned. But the debit entries, while imponderable, were no less important.

For the first time, Hitler had included in the German Reich a large population that was not German in speech or sentiment or historical background. He could no longer justify his expansionist policy on the ground of self-determination and while he tried, in his Reichstag speech, to justify the annexation of Czecho-Slovakia on other grounds this attempt fell flat.

More important was the circumstance that the invasion of Czecho-Slovakia had resulted in a profound alteration of British and French policy. The Chamberlain of the Birmingham speech of March 18 was a very different Chamberlain from the man of Munich. The tide of appeasement had begun to ebb. Further German victories would not be so easily won as had the Munich triumph.

IN HIS ANSWER to President Roosevelt, the Fuehrer did not merely try to justify the annexation of Czecho-Slovakia to his fellow Germans and to the outside world, he also sought to win over the Czechs themselves. This time, in contrast to the past, Hitler praised the Czech nation as deserving of respect for "its skill and ability, its industry, its diligence, its love of its native soil and of its own national heritage." And, he argued, "that which the best and wisest Czechs have struggled for decades to attain is as a matter of course granted to this people in the National Socialist German Reich, namely, the right to their own nationality and the right to foster this nationality and revive it."

But even as he spoke agents of the Gestapo roamed the once free and democratic land which Masaryk and Benes had governed. Tens of thousands of Czechs were in prisons and concentration camps for no reason other than that they believe they had a "right to their own nationality" and had struggled to preserve it. And those who were still technically free were made to realize that Bohemia and Moravia were to be governed not for the benefit of their inhabitants but for the benefit of the Third Reich.

FROM THE VERY first the Czechs resisted their new yoke. They had not been permitted to do so with arms. They did so in other ways, resorting to devices and strategems they had learned to use in the long twilight of the Hapsburg monarchy. And they were buoyed up in their silent struggle with their new masters by the circumstanee that the destruction of Czecho-Slovak independence was not recognized in the free lands of the west.

It is doubtful if now or in the near future, it will come to open war. The Czechs are outnumbered more than 10 to 1. They are unarmed, while their conquerors are not only armed but utterly ruthless as well. The police system, the press, the radio are in the enemy's hands. To them is left only the subterranean channels of communication.

EVEN HAD the Nazi regime shown a disposition to exercise real generosity toward the conquered Slavs in their midst, to vouchsafe them a considerable measure of internal freedom, they could expect no love from the vanquished. But at least decent treatment might keep down the fires of rebellion.

The Nazi regime has shown no such generosity or tolerance. It cannot. Bohemia and Moravia cannot be permitted the kind of freedom withheld from the rest of the Reich. But whereas, the Germans might be persuaded that the loss of freedom was compensated by the fact that its destruction made possible the enhancement of national glory, such agreements leave the non-German elements in the Reich very cool.

So the struggle of the Czechs against their masters goes on. In that struggle the Nazis have all the immediate advantages. As the measures taken in retaliation for the murder of a German police sergeant in the city of Kladno reveal, the Nazi authorities are determined to suppress Czech resistance even by the most drastic methods. But these measures will, in the long run, only increase Germany's difficulties in Bohemia-Moravia. Those provinces will remain a bad headache for Hitler.

U. S. Consul's Wife Made Citizen on Short Visit Here

Mrs. Franklin B. Atwood, who has been married to an American consular official for 16 years, became a citizen of her husband's country yesterday, only a few months after her arrival here for a visit.

Atwood now is consul at Cologne, Germany. He was stationed at Lausanne, Switzerland, in 1923, when he married Gabrielle Vegre. Their three children were born in Geneva.

Justice Gordon admitted Mrs. Atwood to citizenship despite the brief residence in America, because she legally became a resident of America when she was m ied.

Mrs. Atwood has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Fleming, of 3201 Idaho avenue.

The Once Over

Imaginary Chat

President—I'm delighted to have a chat with you, Your Majesty.

King—I'm glad to see you, too, Mr. President. I've heard you on the radio often.

President—I often wondered how good the reception was abroad. Well, we have much in common.

King—We both know what it means to be head of a great country in times like these.

President—You don't know the half of it, George. England, being a democracy, gives the monarch no power. America, being a democracy, gives the ruler all the power. At least, that's the way I look at it. I really can't understand how England can trust things to a Parliament. Don't you feel ineffective?

King—No. I don't feel the same haste you feel. I'm in for life, while with you it is different.

President—What makes you certain it's different?

King—I reach the conclusion from history and tradition. Eight years are all an American ruler may serve.

President—History and tradition are not what they used to be. What did you think of America as you traveled?

King—To me the country looked very prosperous.

President—I wish the newspapermen were here to hear that.

King—Everybody seemed happy and carefree. Even on your public works projects nobody seemed fatigued or hurried or the least anxious about anything. They took it all so leisurely.

King—Is there still a Republican Party?

President—Would you like to see my stamp collection?

King—Oh, let's be frank. I didn't come over to talk about that.

President—We've got to be careful, of course. Are you reluctant to discuss the policies of your government?

President (sadly)—That's the curious thing about monarchies; the ruler acts only in an advisory capacity.

King—I've often thought how nice it must be for a man to be ruler in a democracy like America where he can get absolute power, and do everything his own way. It must be wonderful.

President — Did Chamberlain send any message to me?

King—He just said the same old things about being for Anglo-American friendship and co-operation.

President—I wish he wouldn't use such unfriendly language. Do you think there is going to be war?

King—It can be averted by a spread of good will. You are for good will, of course.

President—In international affairs, yes. I don't regard it as of any consequence here at home. Does England think a war is close?

Mary Haworth's Mail

Her Life Overcast by Morbid Sorrow Since Husband's Death, Five Years Ago, Woman Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For ten years I was married to the grandest huband any woman could possibly ask for. We meant everything to each other and were supremely happy. Then death paid us a visit, and my life has never been the same, or meant anything to me. My friends were unusually kind, sympathetic and patient, but nothing helped much. That was five years ago, and today I am almost as acutely aware of his loss as I was the day of the funeral.

I have employed many remedies, trying to regain my lost interest in life, but somehow I have failed. I gave up my home because I couldn't stand the memories. I even left the city where we had made our home. I took a position, became active in church work, social causes, anything and everything to get my mind off the past. But because I had worked for my husband before we married, I caught myself making mental comparisons between him and my present employers. Also, my husband was a very charitable man, and a deacon in our church, so even these activities remind me of him. Although I have tried to renew my interest in men, I find I can't even do that. Everything I do is forced—and flat.

I don't think any of my friends here suspect how things are with me, because I never talk about myself and try never to mention my husband. As far as I know, I am in good physical health, but my mind seems to need a lot of working over. No matter how tired I am at the end of the day, it is then I miss my husband most, and think of him more often. When I am unusually fatgued, I somtimes lie awake until the early morning hours, just thinking. Once I even thought of joining him, and then I knew I couldn't, because he would have despised such a cowardly act.

I have no relatives and don't feel that my own life is important enough to care much about. Is there any way a woman of my age and experience can change her attitude toward living? I haven't money enough to travel, and I am not in a position to adopt a child—which someone once suggested that I do. I should like to, but it is impossible. Any advice you can give me which might relieve such a miserable situation will be sincerely appreciated.

LONELY.

Conditions for Happiness

DEAR LONELY: Your failure to find any interest in life since your husband's death has been due, as you suspect, to a self-defeating mental attitude, to-wit, to the pessimistic conviction that happiness is a fortuitous, an accidentally bestowed gift of the Fates—a gift (in a lump sum) which you have already had, which has been destroyed, and the like of which, therefore, is not to be your portion again. To feel this way is to take a very limited, a very shortsighted view of life—a view which omits all consideration of those spiritual intangibles which operate in the universe.

Since your husband's death you have muddled through an existence which has been devoid alike of both faith and works—faith to believe that happiness is still your inalienable social and spiritual heritage to claim, and works wherewith to bring that happiness to pass. You have dwelt in the past, refusing to believe, even to hope, that the future could hold any situation or experience capable of yielding joys or consolations comparable to those you knew in your marriage.

Simultaneously with your husband's death, you elected to shroud yourself in inconsolable grief, and thereafter to creep (figuratively speaking) thro:gh life with gaze averted and thoughts turned inward and backward to the past. Your subconscious, intuitive processes—which must first visualize for us the conditions we would create, the experiences we would know, before they can be conjured by faith-guided action into existence—this subconscious level of your personality (which does actually determine the form one's life pattern is to take) became dominated by an image of self as permanently deprived of love and loved ones.

You have, quite unconsciously, been serving this image ever since your husband's death. The measure of your failure to find either passive contentment, positive peace or a new lease on dynamic happiness has been in direct proportion to your disbelief in the existence of such future states of being, for you.

In order to restore yourself once more to the main stream of life, in order to find yourself once more loving and beloved, needed and happily responding to need—you must begin with imagining yourself, vividly and consistently, in such circumstances. As the painter sees with his inner eye the picture he is about to paint, or the architect the building for which he draws blueprints, or the writer the character he is about to depict, and the major situations through which he will guide them, or the the sculptor the figures he will wrest from marble—so must the individual, in the equally creative task of shaping his own future experience, see with his inner eye what he would be and what he would have.

Have done with that negative image of self, as desolate as Hecuba, which you have been serving consciously and subconsciously, directly and indirectly, since your husband's death. Do not continue to despoil the memory of your happiness with him, through perverting it to the usages of morbid sorrow. Instead, let such memories serve as the pattern and the promise of equal, and perhaps greater, happiness, to come.

It has been said that past experience contains the germ of future experience, and where happiness has flourished, it may flourish again. The conditions for its flourishing are mental, spiritual and physical in nature—namely, the imagination to conceive the happy situation; the spirit of faith to sustain the picture, and the willingness to work (faith and image never wavering) to bring the situation into concrete existence.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Lace Cloth Speedily Made Can Become an Heirloom

Stuffed Eggplants Among Treats at Louisiana Party

By Martha Ellyn.

The Post Food Editor.

THE SOUTHLAND is the hearthstone of superb cooking. Every corner of the South is famous for its fine cookery. Mrs. Clarence J. Bourg, a native of Louisiana, was hostess recently to the wives of the Louisiana members of Congress at a Louisiana luncheon at her home in Chevy Chase, Md. Eggplant stuffed with seafood was one of the dishes included in her menu. The following recipe was used in preparing this dish.

Eggplant Stuffed With Seafood

Select 6 medium-sized eggplants. Scald thoroughly in water and cut in half lengthwise. Scoop out the pulp. Cook the eggplant pulp very slowly in fat to which 3 ground onions, ½ sweet pepper, celery tops and salt have been added, for about 45 minutes. St. Martin's Louisiana peppered wet shrimp were used for this particular dish. One can was simmered with the above ingredients and another can was added to the mixture when the eggplants were stuffed. After stuffing the eggplant cover with buttered bread crumbs and brown slowly in the oven. Mrs. Bourg says that often she stuffs eggplant with chicken or round steak and either food makes a delicious dish.

Apples With Coconut

Apple-Coconut Pudding is a baked dessert which is easily made. Peel and quarter 5 or 6 cooking apples. Place in a baking pan. Add ½ cup water. Cover with mixture of 2-3 cup brown sugar, ½ teaspoon cinnamon, and ¼ cup shredded coconut. Bake for 40 minutes at 325 degrees.

Masculine Room Still Can Set Off Woman's Charms

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

THE MEN OFTEN have a right to crab when there is too much fluff in interior decorations. So better be sure, lady dear, that you have one or two rooms in the house that are definitely masculine and no mistake about it.

The other day we saw a living room that we thought had a very masculine air about it and yet it was done with such great style that it would set off a smart woman handsomely. Walls and carpet were in a warm light cocoa shade with draperies of beige silk rep, lined and finished across the top with lengths of beige and chartreuse looped simply on a gold pole. Two easy chairs were in mulberry damask and the sofa was in striped velvet in mulberry, beige and old blue.

A pair of high-backed side chairs in white patent leather were sophisticated accents. The furniture was mostly Regency feeling, some pieces in dark wood, others in bleached finish.

Accessories were quite something—two lamp shades in white silk had swags of mulberry silk around the tops—other lamp shades were covered in gold tea box paper. The mirror over the mantel had a green wreath painted right on the wall around it.

An interesting detail in the woodwork was the use of solid panel double doors covered with cork in the same warm tan tones of the walls and rug. In the center of each cork panel was a round knob which gave a lot of style to the entrances.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Didoes Mark First Summer Sailing of The Normandie

IT HAPPENED RIGHT on schedule and summer broke upon the Hudson River like a terrific time bomb the midnight the Normandie set off on her first big sailing of the season. What did oes, my dearz! What noise, confusion and fun!

ALICE HUGHES

I went over to see off a few friends. Jolly notably John Fred, the millinner, and found hundreds of others making a big, jolly party of the farewell. Among those sailing were Mary Pickford and her Buddy Rogers, and Claire Booth, author of "The Women," and the Harold Vanderbilts, holding up the end for the society crowd. Wine corks popped, whistles blew, girls screamed and a rackety time was had by all.

There were a lot of interesting people among the seer-offers, too. I saw that clever deb, Jane Hall, who has been writing some crackling fiction about the younger folks, and Mary Anita Luce, the glamour publicist who looked mighty dramatic with a black beauty patch in the very middle of her forehead. And the pretty sisters from Columbus, Ohio, Merry Hull and Florence Whitcomb, the first famous young glove designer.

And, of course, there were lots of department store buyers off to prowl the European markets for new goods to tempt our dollars. They are an interesting race, the successful store buyers — chic, sleek and smart. They have a good rule on shipboard during the summer season. Any buyer heard talking business during the voyage has to pay a dollar to a general kitty, which is used to buy wine for the whole crowd on the last night out. Wonder how much wine they manage to collect at journey's end? Anyway, our Hudson River summer came in as the mighty Normandie went out—and it was a red-hot sailing in the great tradition!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I saw little Gloria Vanderbilt, the much-fought-over child, lunching at the Stork Club with her beautiful mother the other day. Gloria, jr., is just out of the hospital after an appendectomy, and looks mighty well and pretty already, and she tucked away a mighty plateful of potato salad as I watched. Strange to think that the child of battle will "come out" herself in a few years. Ah, and come out where?

The other day I saw the first famous and beautiful model I knew in New York. Now she is Mrs. E. E. Cummings, wife of the writer, but then she was Marion Morehouse, tall, dark, slim beauty whose face and figure were seen everywhere. She's still very lovely, of course, and has even written a play in French. Can't be much money in that, Marion, but maybe you don't need much money.

Mary Pickford A Passenger With Buddy Rogers

I WAS AMONG those present when Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, wife of the Ambassador to England, came in the other morning for a visit with her parents in Boston. My gracious, I'll bet she's the loveliest mother of nine children in this world! And with that big family, she came home alone.

Latest symptoms of our bigness was the wonderful reception given to our newest citizen on the Central Park Mall the other evening. Just think—there were nearly 40,000 of the recently naturalized present. It was a thrilling sight. May we be worthy of their trust and hope in us!

Our Mr. Buck O'Neill, who is in charge of Pier A at the Battery, is busy at his usual summer work of saving lives. The other day Eleanor Jehoe fell into the briny, and Buck pulled her out. She was his 282d rescue in the 27 years he's worked for the dock department. Wonder how many tons of medals he has by this time?

Now it comes, as usual. What shall we give the happy bride? This is a problem, and I wish all relatives and friends of the newly spliced pair would get together and confer, to avoid duplication. Some one told me that no household ever has a large enough assortment of trays, and I think this is a happy thought. Of course, book-ends and lamps will get the big play as usual, I suppose.

Good Manners Win Popularity

HOW DELIGHTFULLY poised, sure of her manners, is Mildred as she takes her leave at the party.

She doesn't hesitate awkwardly, wonder if it's her place to say, "I'm glad to have met you" to Ralph, with whom she had such a pleasant talk.

It's the man's privilege, she knows, to make such a remark after an introduction. And how graciously she replies! No self-conscious giggle—but a smiling "I hope we shall meet again."

Almost every girl gets chances to meet charming people—to go to dances, theaters, restaurants—but it's only the girl who knows what's correct every step of the way who is invited over and over again. So check up on your manners.

Dining at a smart restaurant with an exciting new man, shall you tell the waiter where you want to sit? No, your escort asks your preference, tells the waiter. Time to dance, who steps first on the floor? You go first, your beau follows.

A guest at a house party? Show your hostess you really appreciate your good time by writing your thank-you letter within a few days after you return home.

In doubt what to wear when invited out? Always correct to ask the invitation-giver, "Are you dressing for dinner?" "Is it a formal party?"

You make the grade with the nicest people, go to the most exciting places when your manners are smooth. Our 40-page booklet, "Etiquette for Every Day," gives you modern manners for hostess and guest. Tells what's correct on dates, at restaurants, dances, games, the theater, when motoring, traveling.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Etiquette for Every Day," to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

D. C. Society Women Get Final Peek at King

Feminine Sex Alone Seated In Seats Outside Capitol; Queen's Gown Subject of Comment

By Dudley Harmon

Ordinarily perfect ladies forgot their manners for once yesterday in eagerness to get a glimpse of the King and Queen as they arrived at the east entrance to the Capitol for the ceremonies marking the Congressional welcome to the King and Queen. The rows and rows of wooden seats in the sections were reserved entirely for women, but surely men could not have been more vociferous. Everybody was supposed to remain seated, and whenever an unfortunate stood up in one of the sections for a better glimpse, there were angry feminine shrieks of "Down in front," which rose at times to howls of rage.

Many members of Capital society who had already had a "garden party" look at the royal pair gathered in the milling mob yesterday before the Capitol for another peep. Some arrived an hour ahead of time, and sat patiently clutching their white cards and listening to the strains of music furnished at the rear of the sections by the red-coated members of the Marine Band.

Mrs. Warren Austin, wife of Senator Austin, was glimpsed chatting with two friends who had the air of constituents. The pleasant Vermont lady wore a blue and white cotton print, with matching hat, and fanned herself vigorously with her large card of admission.

Slender, chic Mrs. Chauncey Parker assisted several young Parkers to get a better look. She wore a navy blue tailored frock, with a white pin stripe, white cuffs on the short puffed sleeves, and a white straw poke bonnet effect.

Best Seats Are on Aisle

One of the two very best seats in the whole section was occupied by Miss Vera Bloom, whose father, Representative Sol Bloom, was a member of the joint committee on arrangements. Her place as front row, right on the aisle down which the King and Queen marched after the ceremonies were over. Miss Bloom had an excellent view of her father as he met Their Majesties when they descended from their automobile and accompanied them up the steps. With the Representative's daughter was Mrs. McCeney Werlich, who wore a black frock and broad-brimmed hat to keep the sun off. Mrs. Bloom had originally planned to come, but finally decided against it. After all, she didn't have to sit in stands to get a glimpse of royalty, as she and her husband met the couple at the train, went to the garden party in their honor, and attended both the dinner at the White House and the one at the British Embassy.

Mrs. Harry Flood strolled about while waiting for the King and Queen to emerge from the Capitol. She was accompanied by her pretty daughter, Miss Eleanor Flood, who looked cool and collected in a pale blue silk frock and hat with streamers of varicolored ribbons.

Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, who had also attended the garden party, occupied a choice seat near the middle of the section, and was flanked by her two daughters, the Misses Martha and Virginia Bacon. She was in black, with a high-crowned black hat trimmed with a bow; Miss Virginia Bacon had chosen a checked print and her sister wore black with a full plaited skirt. Both the sisters were hatless.

Mrs. Richard Wigglesworth, wife of Representative Wigglesworth, managed to look cool, probably because she comes from Kentucky and is used to the heat. She wore a brown and white print, and chatted with friends.

Umbrellas Seen In All Directions

Miss Florence Harris wandered about looking for her mother, Mrs. Russell Bennett, whom she had left sitting under a bright red umbrella. Evidently, unlike the Queen, no one here owns a parasol, for on first arriving one looked over a sea of umbrellas. All were ordered put away, though, when the King and Queen arrived.

"Keep sitting down—it looks better," shouted policemen as enthusiastic women tried to rise for a glimpse of Their Majesties. Small children squirmed and twisted in the heat, and didn't seem to want to stay seated.

Others who gathered for the ceremonies included Mrs. Mondell Gregg, who wore a light summer print; Mrs. Louis Caldwell, in navy blue; Mrs. Edward Wilber, Mrs. Walter Louchheim, who was accompanied by Mrs. James Rowe, and Mrs. Louis Mintz.

All the women present kept up a steady chatter which reached a climax of running comment on the subject of the Queen's gown. "What material is it?" "Is it floor length?" "Isn't she pretty!" "The King is sweet," etc., etc., as the temperature steadily mounted.

De Escalantes Visit New York

The Venezuelan Ambassador and Senora de Escalante are in New York to meet their son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mme. Istvan Kerpel-Fronius, who will arrive from France on the liner Champlain to make a short visit to the Capital.

The envoy and his wife will remain in New York to attend a dinner to be given in their honor on Thursday by the Pan-American Society and the Venezuelan Chamber of Commerce. They will return on Friday.

Mrs. Blair To Wed June 14

Mrs. Granger Blair has selected Wednesday, June 14, as the date of her marriage to Arthur Krock. The ceremony will take place at the home of Mrs. Blair's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Hoyt Granger, of Few Acres, Roxbury, Conn.

Mrs. Blair came to Washington from Chicago several years ago to make her home. Since then she has been doing a society column for a Capital newspaper. Mr. Krock, originally from the South, is head of the Washington Bureau of the New York Times.

The ceremony will be a quiet one and the couple will leave afterward. On their return from a honeymoon they will continue to make their home in Washington.

Mrs. Blair, who is the former Martha McC. Granger, was first married to William Blair, of Chicago. Their marriage ended in divorce several years ago.

Miss Freedman Is Guest Here Of Mrs. Van Arsdale

Miss Adria Joline Freedman, of New York, is a house guest of Mrs. Henry Van Arsdale at the Westchester, who entertained for her yesterday at luncheon.

Guests included Mrs. Lanier McLachlen, Mrs. Leslie Frazer, Mrs. Stewart McDonald, Mrs. Bryan Beatty, Mrs. Ernest Bryan, Mrs. Clarence McKay and Mrs. Walter Crain, of Alexandria.

Dr. Mary Atkeson Awarded Degree

Dr. Mary Meek Atkeson (Mrs. Blaine Free Moore) has returned from Charleston, W. Va., where the degree of doctor of literature was conferred on her at the commencement May 30 of Morris Harvey College. She also visited her mother, Mrs. Thomas Clark Atkeson, and her brother, Dr. Karl C. Atkeson, at the old family residence near Buffalo, W. Va.

The story of this house, Lawnvale Farm, and the family which has resided there were related by Dr. Atkeson in her book, "Pioneering in Agriculture." A historical marker has been set up at Lawnvale Farm to commemorate the leadership in agriculture of Miss Atkeson's father, Dr. Thomas Clark Atkeson.

Carl Bocks On Honeymoon

Now on their honeymoon through the New England States, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Lyle Bock will make their home at 3021 Bunker Hill road, Mount Ranier, Md.

The former Miss Eleanor Carolyn Nordeen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Nordeen, and Mr. Bock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Bock, of Mount Ranier, Md., were married Wednesday evening at the Mount Ranier Christian Church. The Rev. Fred L. Miller officiated at the 7 o'clock ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white crepe organdy, fashioned with a basque waist, train and puffed sleeves complemented by lace mitts. Her veil fell from a halo of seed pearls and lilies of the valley, and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Bridesmaids were Miss Virginia Windisch, Miss Lois Lanier, and Miss Dorothy Zihlman, who also wore dotted swiss gowns. All attendants wore white lace mitts, coronets of daisies in their hair and carried quaint garden bouquets of corn flowers, daisies and larkspur.

J. Delmar Bock, brother of the bridegroom, was the best man and the ushers were Carl E. Nordeen, jr., Harvey Lanier and George Merriken.

Immediately following the ceremony there was a reception in the garden of the home of the bride's parents. The bride's mother was gowned in corn flower blue lace and wore a corsage of gardenias. The mother of the bridegroom wore coral marquisette over silk and a gardenia corsage.

Assisting at the reception were Ronald and Kermitt Nordeen, young brothers of the bride, Miss Gladys Johns and Miss Gretta Loomis, cousin of the bride.

Mrs. Swanson to Join Secretary in Virginia

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, will leave Washington today or tomorrow to join the Secretary at Camp Rapidan in the Shenandoah Valley. Secretary and Mrs. Swanson will remain there for the duration of the summer, returning to town shortly after Labor Day.

Yesterday Mrs. Swanson accompanied President and Mrs. Roosevelt and the royal party on the Potomac to Mount Vernon.

Nathalie Boborykine Married To Hal Lary at Russian Church

Three Attendants Take Turns Holding Crowns Over Heads of Couple During Elaborate 40-Minute Orthodox Nuptials

At an elaborate ceremony yesterday at the Russian Orthodox Church, Miss Nathalie Boborykine, daughter of Mme. Marie Boborykine and the late Col. Boborykine, of the Russian Imperial Guard, became the bride of Hal Buckner Lary, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lary, of Granbury, Tex. The Rev. Paul T. Lutov officiated at the 6 o'clock ceremony.

In addition to the traditional maid of honor, the bride and bridegroom were each attended by three ushers who held crowns over their heads during the 40 minutes of the Russian ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by Capt. Illarion V. Mishtowt, former military attache of the old Russian Imperial Embassy. She wore a white satin gown, fashioned on simple and severe lines, with long, tight sleeves, high neckline and a long train. Her headdress, fashioned of satin and resembling the high Russian court headdress, was designed by Mme. Delia, court dressmaker to Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth of England. Mme. Delia has been in Washington for the past two weeks. The headdress was finished at the top by a cording of plaited satin, and held the tulle veil which extended to the end of the train. The bride carried a bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley, but wore no jewels, since the wearing of jewels in the Orthodox Church is forbidden.

Her maid of honor, Miss Tania Gnootcheff, was gowned in yellow net, with a blue hat and accessories, and wore a corsage of blue cornflowers. John Brewer, of Texas, was the best man for Mr. Lary.

Ushers Hold Crowns Over Bridal Couple

The three ushers attending the bride, who took turns at holding the crown over her during the long ceremony, were Prince Peter Wilkonsky, George Mishtowt and Basil Mishtowt.

Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of Mrs. Lester Buchanan, on Massachusetts avenue. The mother of the bride was gowned in pervanche blue chiffon, and wore a corsage of violets. Assisting at the reception was the sister of the bride's mother, Countess Elizabeth Heiden, who wore an empire style gown of rose chiffon.

Couple to Live In Washington

When the couple left for their wedding journey, a motor tour through New England, the bride wore a pale blue linen suit with white accessories and a corsage of gardenias. They will make their home at 2229 Bancroft place.

Among the ranking guests at the wedding and reception were Prince and Princess Wolkonsky, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Andrew C. Pickens, Dr. and Mrs. James Alexander Lyon and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Baldwin.

The bride was educated in Princess Theodore of Russia's School in Paris, then trained as a nurse in London. She and her mother came to America last year. Her father, who was in the Czar's army, was killed during the revolution, but it was 1928 before Mme. Baborykine and her daughter could escape from the country. Mme. Boborykine, the former Countess Heiden, of St. Petersburg, was an honorary lady in waiting to the late Czarina Alexandra of Russia and to the Dowager Empress Marie, the mother of the Czar Nicholas.

Mr. Lary was graduated from the Universite Internationale in Geneva, Switzerland, and is connected with the Department of Commerce here.

Party Honors Mrs. Cajigas

Mrs. Charles McEnerney entertained at a large luncheon yesterday at the Woman's National Democratic Club in honor of Mrs. Tomas Cajigas, who will leave next week to spend the summer in California. The hostess presented her with a traveling kit and card case at the party.

The guests were seated at a large horseshoe-shaped table centered with flowers in shades of lavender and yellow. About half lingered on after luncheon for a game of bridge.

Senora de Recinos, wife of the Minister of Guatemala; Senora de Castro, wife of the envoy of San Salvador, and Senora de Pastoriza of the Dominican Minister, were ranking members of the company. Other guests were Mrs. Claude Pepper, wife of Senator Pepper; Mrs. James Hughes, wife of Senator Hughes; Mrs. Scott Lucas, wife of Senator Lucas; Senora de Munilla, wife of the Military Attache of the Cuban Embassy; Senora de Caceras, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of Honduras; Senora de Munilla, wife of the Military Attache of the Cuban Embassy; Senora de Fombona-Pachano, wife of the Counselor of the Venezuelan Embassy; Mme. Hector Arcaya, Mrs. Alberto Vargas, Mrs. Oscar Albertini, and Miss Angela Cromeyer, sister of Senora de Castro, who will give a tea in her honor today.

Farleys to Spend Week-End in N. Y.

The Postmaster General, James A. Farley, accompanied by Mrs. Farley, left Washington late yesterday afternoon for New York, where the Postmaster General will spend the week-end with his family before returning to his duties in Washington.

Mrs. Farley, who makes her home in New York, came to Washington during the past week to attend the festivities for the King and Queen of England.

Notes of Society

Official and Residential

Mme. Loudon, wife of the Netherlands Minister, will spend the summer at New Bedford, Mass.

The Minister of Panama and Senora de Boyd have been joined here by the former's sister, Miss Laura Boyd, who will be at the Mayflower for several weeks.

Representative and Mrs. Leland M. Ford, of Santa Monica, Calif., who recently moved to the Wardman Park Hotel, have been joined there by their daughter, Miss Beryl Ford, who came here from Lynchburg, Va., accompanied by Mrs. J. D. Christian, who is visiting her parents.

Guy T. Helvering, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and Mrs. Helvering will leave today for San Francisco and Los Angeles. In the latter city they will visit their niece, Mrs. Richard Weldon King, who formerly resided with them here. They will stop at their home in Marysville, Kans., before returning to their apartment at the Mayflower in August.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Antwerpen, of Passaic, N. J., are spending the week-end at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Countess d'Adhemar, widow of Count Raoul d'Adhemar, has leased the cottage of Mr. and Mrs. George Baulsir, at Gibson Island, for the season, and is now occupying it.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel S. Porter, of San Diego, were dinner guests last evening of Judge Harold M. Stephens. They are at the Mayflower after attending the World's Fair.

Dr. and Mrs. H. H. Tuynboll, of Leyden, Holland, have returned to the Capital and have taken an apartment at the Fairfax. They spent a year in the Netherlands and Germany.

Edward Burlings Give Buffet Dinner for 45

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Burling, jr., entertained last evening at an informal outdoor buffet dinner for 45 guests.

The party was given at the Burling cabin on the Great Falls road. Following the supper a program of music entertained the guests until far into the evening.

Your Figure, Madame!

Wife Can Please Her Husband by Slimming Figure

FATHER'S DAY ORIGINATED as an afterthought. Mother came first! So far, no typical father has been elected and any man would be reluctant to accept the nomination. What would the fellows at the office say, and what would he be called—Mr. America?

But, all the same, Father's Day is a pretty grand idea and if you really want to give him a present, get your figure back. He married you because he liked your looks—not because you were a good cook!

Fifteen Minutes a Day

If you will take just 15 minutes out of your busy mornings to exercise, you can again have as nice a figure as when you tripped down the aisle. Today's exercises are planned expressly to slim the waist, flatten the tummy, and smooth down the hips, and the first two are done in an upsy-daisy position to let beauty go to your head as you streamline your measurements.

POSITION: Lying on back on floor, legs straight, feet elevated from floor and resting on chair seat. Have the arms straight down at the sides.

MOVEMENT: Raise the right leg straight up in the air to right angles as you lift the hips straight off the floor to form a straight line with the body. Lower the leg, return to position, and repeat with the left leg. (Ten times for a starter!)

MOVEMENT: Kick from the hips, keeping the legs straight, and swing each leg as far out in front and in back of the body as possible. Keep it up for 15 counts, relax, and change sides. Gradually work up to 100 counts, relaxing between each 15.

As far as dieting goes, all you need do is plan your menus around the protective foods—meat, vegetables, fruits, milk, eggs, cheese, whole wheat bread, butter. It is no favor to your family to give them rich meals every day.

Today's Health Talk

By Dr. Logan Clendenning

Rheumatism is a general term for any chronic ache in the joints or muscles or along nerve paths. We speak of "sciatic rheumatism," or rather, they who have it speak of "sciatic rheumatism" when they mean a pain along the course of the sciatic nerve, down the back of the leg. And far from disagreeing with this nomenclature, I challenge any of my colleagues to say that it is not just as good a term as "sciatica" or "neuritis of the sciatic nerve."

Strictly speaking, in the rheumatisms arthritis is inflammation, or at least pain, in a joint. Neuritis is pain along a nerve, and myositis is pain in a muscle.

(A sharp distinction, however, should be made between what I might be willing to call chronic rheumatism and acute rheumatic fever, or, as it is sometimes called, inflammatory rheumatism, or even acute rheumatism. This infection affects joints one after another, going away from one joint within 24 hours after onset and lighting on a different one. Its worst effects are on the heart.)

About the cause of arthritis, neuritis and myositis of the chronic variety physicians know very little. But they are fairly well agreed that in most cases some kind of an infection may begin far away, be of a focal nature—that is, be localized in a tooth, the tonsils, the sinuses of the nose, the gallbladder, etc. To prove this point, many cases have been relieved by the removal of these foci of infection.

A new view of the relationship is brought forward by Dr. Otto Meyer, now practicing in New York, in a little book (published by the Elliot Publishing Company, New York) called "Rheumatism."

Dr. Meyer's idea is that these diseases are caused by phlebitis, which means inflammation of the veins. And while physicians would immediately be inclined to doubt this, it should be explained that Dr. Meyer means concealed latent phlebitis, a phlebitis not evident to the casual inspection.

He thinks that phlebitis of this kind is most frequent in the jugular veins in the neck and the veins of the leg. In the jugular veins because through them most infections from the teeth, tonsils and sinuses enter the blood stream, and the veins of the leg because they receive the residue of infections.

Phlebitis in the leg is increased by long, uninterrupted standing. Cramps often attributed to "growing pains" may be a sign of this.

Treatment of latent concealed phlebitis, according to Dr. Meyer, is to relieve the congestion by walking at least three miles a day, removal of garters and other tight-fitting constrictions. Treatment of jugular phlebitis is by leeches. The whole idea seems a variation of the focal infection theory but will do no harm to try.

1,500 Railroad Workers Indorse Third-Term Race

Houston, Tex., June 9 (AP).—President Roosevelt was indorsed unanimously for a third term today by 1,500 union railroad workers and their wives.

The joint session of the Tri-State Conference of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen was attended by delegates from Toronto, Canada, and 20 States.

Dr. Edwin A. Elliott, of Fort Worth, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board, precipitated the action with the statement: "If we need a Roosevelt third term to have more of the New Deal, let's have it."

71 Cherry Trees Moved or Cut

The Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission yesterday had the last word on the controversy which raged over destruction of Japanese cherry trees around the Tidal Basin last fall when the memorial construction began.

In its annual report, the commission said:

"As regards the cherry trees affected by the memorial, the facts concerning this plan are as follows:

"Within the circle of 600 feet diameter, which includes the area to be occupied by the memorial proper and surrounding roads, there were only 46 cherry trees which had to be moved, and 35 old cherry trees were cut which had about reached their natural age of 30 years and could not be moved.

"This is the total of cherry trees cut or moved from the place where the memorial will stand.

"Then where the Tidal Basin shoreline is changed, 37 cherry trees will have to be moved and 53 cherry trees will have to be cut. This makes a total of 83 cherry trees to be moved and transplanted, and 88 cherry trees to be cut out of a total of 1,700 cherry trees now in Potomac Park, and it is contemplated that 1,000 additional cherry trees will be planted when the memorial is completed."

James Brady, Veterans' Unit Solicitor, Dies

Commander of District Department of Legion Passes Unexpectedly

BRADY

Mr. Brady was born at Holbrook, Mass. He was a graduate of Bates College, Maine, and the Georgetown University Law School, where he received his degree in 1921. He came to the Veterans' Administration in January, 1919, after serving overseas with the Coast Artillery Corps. Before the war he had been in the shoe business.

Entering the finance service of the administration he later became attorney in the solicitor's office and assistant solicitor, being appointed solicitor in 1934. He was a member of the District bar and had practiced before the United States Supreme Court and the appellate courts of several States.

Legion Commander

A member of the National Cathedral Post, No. 10, American Legion, for the last 15 years, he served successively as post adjutant and post vice commander before becoming post commander in 1937. He was elected department commander last August.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Beatrice K. Brady; a son, James T., jr.; a daughter, Beatrice Ann Brady, and a sister, Miss Leona Brady, all of this city; another sister, Mrs. J. L. Dowd, of Holbrook, and his mother, Mrs. Hannah Brady, of Holbrook.

Requiem mass will be said at 9 a. m. Monday, at St. Ann's Church, River road and Wisconsin avenue northwest, followed by burial in Arlington Cemetery.

Marlene Dietrich Becomes Citizen

Los Angeles, June 9 (AP).—Marlene Dietrich, who once complained she could not afford to live in America, became an American citizen today.

Fashionably attired—"I wear only American-made clothes"—the German actress stood in a Federal courtroom with 59 others and took the oath of allegiance to the United States.

"I have waited five years for this moment," she said.

New Chaplain Named for St. Elizabeths

The Rev. Mr. Hyle, Of Sacred Heart, Gets Post; Other Changes Listed

The naming of the Rev. Michael W. Hyle, assistant pastor at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart, as chaplain of St. Elizabeths Hospital and administrator of Mount Olivet Cemetery, was announced yesterday by the Rev. Joseph M. Nelligan, chancellor of the Archdiocese of Baltimore.

This appointment, and several local and nearby pastoral changes were made by the Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore, prior to his recent departure on a European trip, but were not officially announced until yesterday.

Since coming to Washington following his ordination in Rome 12 years ago, Father Hyle has served continuously at the Sixteenth and Park Road parish, both as curate and later as assistant pastor.

One of Washington's most popular priests, the Rev. Francis J. Kelly, assistant at St. Patrick's, has been appointed to the assistant pastorate of Our Lady of Victory Church, Washington, where he will assist the Rev. Louis C. Vaeth, director of the Home and Foreign Mission Society for the Propagation of the Faith.

Meanwhile, coming to St. Patrick's as assistant and secretary of the Washington section of Diocesan Tribunal will be the Rev. James E. Cowhig, of Our Lady of Victory Church.

The Rev. Bernard W. Prosise, administrator of St. Gregory's Church in Baltimore, has been selected to fill the vacancy created by the death of the Rev. Andrew J. Carey, rector of St. Jerome's in Hyattsville, and the Rev. Maurice J. King, acting pastor of St. Ann's Church in Tenleytown, D. C., has been transferred to the assistant pastorate of the Immaculate Conception Church in Towson.

Following years of loyal service as assistant to the Rev. Charles R O'Hara at Holy Comforter Church, the Rev. Edward J. A. Nester has been promoted to the pastorate of St. John's Church, Long Green, Md., while the Rev. Henry D. Collins, of the latter church, will take over St. Ann's pastorate, a post long vacant. The Rev. Edwin A. Luckett, recently ordained, will become Father Nester's successor.

The Rev. Edmond J. Fontaine, assistant at St. Paul's Catholic Church for many years, will leave to become rector of the Church of St. Mary, Star of the Sea, at Indianhead, Md. The Rev. Thomas M. Kelly, newly ordained, will fill the St. Paul's vacancy.

Granted a leave of absence because of ill health, the Rev. Thomas A. Cunningham, for some time pastor of the Church of the Holy Ghost at Issue, Md., and once stationed at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart, will be succeeded by the Rev. Robert J. Froelich, of St. Matthew's Church, this city. The Rev. Joseph G. Cole will fill the St. Matthew's vacancy.

Three other recently ordained clerics and their posts will be the Rev. James E. Malloy, assistant at St. John's, Forest Glen, Md.; the Rev. Raymond P. Repetti, assistant, Sacred Heart, and the Rev. John B. Roeder, assistant, St. Gabriel's Church. The Rev. Wilbur F. X. Wheeler will become director of the Washington section of the Archconfraternity of Christian Doctrine.

Michael John Farrell was appointed from the Basselin Foundation in Washington to take up his theological studies in the fall at St. Mary's Seminary, Roland Park, Baltimore.

Mooney Terms Garner 'Decrepit' At Work Congress

By the Associated Press.

Organized unemployed and WPA workers opposed to Vice President Garner as a 1940 Presidential candidate, gave Tom Mooney a rousing ovation yesterday when he spoke of Garner as "a decrepit old showpiece from a dude ranch."

The one-time labor leader addressed the unemployed and WPA workers at their national Right-to-Work Congress sponsored by the Workers Alliance, which previously adopted a resolution opposing Garner as a 1940 candidate.

Representative Marcantonio (America Labor Party), New York, told the delegates that in order to save the country for the New Deal "the people of the country must rally for adequate WPA appropriations and guarantee the continuance of a great progressive in the White House in 1940."

Burial in Warrenton For Miss Maude Yates

Funeral services for Miss Maude Yates, 67, of 1669 Columbia road northwest, Deparment of Justice attorney, were held yesterday morning at the Lee funeral home, with burial in Warrenton, Va., her birthplace.

Miss Yates had been attached to the Department of Justice for nearly 30 years.

She was the daughter of Henry C. and Elizabeth D. Yates, of Warrenton, and is survived by a sister, Mrs. Roberta Y. Withers, of Washington; two brothers, Harry D. Yates, of Washington, and Lieut. Comdr. Robert R. Yates, U. S. Navy, now stationed in Hawaii.

Body of Sarabia, Mexican Ace, Starts Home on Giant U.S. Plane

World's Mightiest Military Aircraft Carrying Aviator Who Plunged to Death in Potomac River

The body of Francisco Sarabia, Mexican air ace, last night started home in the world's mightiest military plane with full honors from the American Government.

Largest of the Army's flying fortresses, the B-15 soared up at midnight from Bolling Field, where Senor Sarabia three days ago took off for Mexico, only to plunge into the Potomac a few seconds later.

Earlier last night Senora Agripina de Serabia, the flier's widow, and their three young children boarded an Eastern Airlines plane for Mexico City. Two hundred persons, including Mexican Ambassador Francisco Castillo Nojera and his staff, saw them off.

Brother Aboard Fortress

Mexican Embassy officials stood guard all day yesterday by the body of the aviator as it lay in state in the W. W. Chambers funeral home.

Two hours before the take-off they joined the State Department officials, led by motorcycle police, in an escort of honor to Bolling Field.

Aboard the flying fortress were to be Santiago Sarabia, brother of the flier; Lieut. Comdr. Manuel Zermeno, Mexican naval attache, and L. Jesse Auton, of the War Department, delegated to carry a special message of condolence from President Roosevelt to President Cardenas. Pilot is Col. Caleb Haynes.

Meanwhile in Mexico City, according to the Associated Press, Foreign Minister Eduardo Hay ridiculed rumors of sabotage in connection with Sarabia's accident. Hay's statement followed stoning of an American school and assignment of a police guard to the United States Embassy.

The Mexican Ambassador in Washington was instructed by Hay to convey to President Roosevelt the "feeling of gratitude of the government and the people of Mexico for the co-operation they rendered our glorious aviator, "Serabia" and for assistance and expressions of sympathy after his death.

A letter from the President to Senora Sarabia, made public yesterday, declares that "the name of Francisco Sarabia, his valor and his achievements will be an inspiring example to the young men of both countries for generations to come."

Arrest in Anti-U. S. Riots

Mxico City, June 9 (U.P.).—Police today arrested Joel J. Torres on charges of leading anti-American riots here while the government itself led the way in condemning student demonstrations against the United States because of the death in Washington, D. C., of Francisco Sarabia.

The arrest of Torres followed a statement by Police Chief Federico Montes that the university students, who yesterday rioted in the vicinity of the United States Embassy and broke windows at the American school in protest against the "murder" of Sarabia, did not demonstrate of their own volition. Montes said Torres provoked the agitation.

James Otey Dies; Chief Messenger Of Treasury

James A. Otey, chief messenger of the Treasury Department and one-time messenger for Secretary of the Treasury Ogden Mills, died last night at [illegible]. Mr. Otey joined the Treasury Department 35 years ago, and among other jobs served as secretary of the supply room. He became messenger for Mr. Mills when the latter was Undersecretary of the Treasury, and remained when Mills took over the Secretary's post. At the time of his boss' death in October, 1937, Mr. Otey declared: "I wish I could have died instead."

Capital News In Brief

The Perils of Sport

The summer plans of two Maryland boys were abruptly changed last night when eight policemen surrounded the Army and Navy Trading Co., Eighth and D streets northwest, and caught the youngsters gathering enough sporting equipment to furnish a summer camp.

A passerby noticed figures moving in the rear of the store and in response to his summons two scout cars and a patrol wagon containing four policemen arrived from the First Precinct.

After throwing a corden around the building, two officers entered the store through a skylight in the roof, and found two boys aged 13 and 14 huddled under a counter, near a pile of baseball gloves, fishing tackle and bathing suits that had caught their fancy.

G. P. O. Guard Robbed

Night Swimming to Start

Night swimming in the East Potomac Park Pool on Hains Point will begin today, recreation officials announced yesterday. The pool will be open every night until 11 p. m. through the summer.

Masons Here Give 'Night Of Thrills'

20,000 at Griffith Stadium See Show; Jean Carnahan Is Crowned as Queen

More than 20,000 spectators last night packed Griffith Stadium for the annual "Night of Thrills" sponsored by the Worshipful Masters and Worthy Matrons and Patrons Association of the Masonic Order.

Highlighting the program was the crowning of Miss Jean Carnahan, of Eastgate Chapter, No. 21, as "Queen of the Pageant" by Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson, after she was welcomed to her regal office by Dorothy Herring, outgoing queen.

The proceedings started at 5 p. m. with a ball game that drew a bigger crowd than has watched Washington's Senators in some days, as was discovered by Clark Griffith, who counted the house at midevening. In a fast game Potomac Electric Power Co. bested the FBI, 5-1.

After Miss Carnahan's crowning nine uniformed Washington Masonic groups, led by three National Guard units and the 121st Engineers Band under the command of Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, marched around the stadium.

Following the guardsmen were four limousines bearing Eugene E. Thompson, grand master of District Masons; Mrs. Ruth Cromelin, worthy grand matron; Richard E. Tetlow, worth grand patron; Miss Carnahan and her court, Clark Griffith and Assistant Secretary Johnson.

Included in the marching Masonic units were Knights Templar, Alamas Temple, Acca Temple, of Richmond, Va.; Kallipolis Grotto, Capitol Forest, No. 104, Tall Cedars of Lebanon; Robert LeBruce Chapter, Order of DeMolay; DeMolay patrol, Ladies of the Shrine, Ladies Shrine Patrol. Bands included the Elks Boys Band and the Ladies Shrine Band.

Clowns and comedy performers with "death defying" acts kept the crowd alternately in laughter and suspense.

Mrs. Clara Latta, White House Clerk's Wife, Dies

Mrs. Clara Hayes Latta, 71, wife of Maurice C. Latta, chief executive clerk at the White House, died yesterday at her home, 2836 Twenty-seventh street northwest.

Mrs. Latta was born in Leavenworth, Kans., and was married in Perry, Okla., in 1897. She came to Washington the following year, when her husband was appointed to the White House staff by President McKinley. She was a member of the Washington Heights Presbyterian Church for many years.

In addition to her husband she is survived by two sons, James Latta, of Bethesda, Md., and Maurice C. Latta, jr., of St. Louis, and two grandchildren.

Services will be held in the William Reuben Pumphrey funeral home, Bethesda, Md., Monday, at 11 a. m., and burial will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Proctor Regrets Sentencing $16 Forger to a Year

Laws which would give the courts wider discretion in punishing petty forgeries were urged yesterday by Justice Proctor when he found himself obliged to sentence a man who passed a $16.33 check to at least a year in jail.

Adelard P. Fortin, 48, pleaded guilty to forging the name of the Rev. Lawrence J. Shehan to a check drawn against the Catholic Charities of Washington.

The Justice commented that the law seemed rigid, since it required him to punish the forger who got such a small sum with the same prison term meted out to forgers who got much more.

Woodward School Gives 14 Diplomas

Fourteen students of the Woodward School for Boys last night were presented diplomas while more than a score received awards for scholarship, athletics and other attainments in the school at 1736 G street northwest last night.

Mrs. Ellen Bruin Funeral Today

Mrs. M. Ellen Bruin, widow of C. M. Bruin, died Thursday evening at her home, 1623 Duke street, after an illness of two weeks. She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Mary B. Henderson, of Alexandria; a brother, John C. Rust, of Lovettsville, Va.; a half-brother, R. L. Rust, of Buffalo, N. Y., and a half-sister, Mrs. Mattie Rhoderick, of Mount Airy, Md.

Mrs. Bruin was a member of Martha Washington Chapter, Order of Eastern Star, and of the First Baptist Church. The funeral will be held at 2 p. m. today from the Demaine funeral home, conducted by the Rev. Dr. Pierce S. Ellis, and burial will be in Ivy Hill Cemetery.

Judge Curran Gives Talk at Graduation

Radio Engineering Institute Certifies 53 at Exercises

The leaders of the future will be the men who dare great things, Police Court Judge Edward M. Curran told graduates of the Capitol Radio Engineering Institute last night at the Willard Hotel.

Fifty-three members of the graduating class sat down to dinner with Judge Curran and faculty members, before the diplomas were awarded by E. H. Reitzke, president of the institute.

Among the graduates were three Coast Guardsmen, assigned for advance study in radio technology, and a man who is acting as sound engineer for the public address system in the House.

Alan O. Davidson, Meredith Howard Griffith and James L. Koonce are the men from the Coast Guard, and Eustace H. Taylor keeps the Congressional voices clear and recognizable.

"Many of you men will become leaders in the field of radio engineering," Curran told the graduates, "you will be leaders because you have the courage to dare great things and I say to you men that it is far better to dare great things, even though your course be checkered by failure, than to take rank with those who neither enjoy much nor suffer much because they live in the great twilight that knows neither victory nor defeat."

Those who received diplomas are:

'Tired of Living,' Man Writes; Kills Self in Hotel

William J. Kennedy, 45, of 1127 Twelfth street northwest, was found dead last night in a room of a downtown hotel, shot through the head. He clutched a .38 caliber revolver in his right hand.

In registering the man had given his occupation as an employe of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, but personnel officers there said they had no one by that name on their roster.

He left three notes, one addressed to his wife, Hilda, also of the Twelfth street address, in which he said he was "tired of living." A maid discovered the body. A doctor said the man had been dead five hours.

Woman Gas Victim Declared Suicide

Mrs. Margaret Van Sant Sharp, 31, of 1318 Thirteenth street northwest, was found dead by her husband last night, a rubber tube extending from a gas stove in her mouth.

Her husband, Robert, was summoned by neighbors after they detected the odor of gas issuing from her apartment. He entered to find her on the kitchen floor, paper stuffed in door and window cracks.

Four Held as Suspects In $118 Robbery

Four youths were held at the First Precinct station last night as suspects in the robbery of Edward G. Hobby, 47, of 611 Sixth street southwest, early yesterday. Hobby was attacked in an alley rear of Seventh and F streets southwest and robbed of about $118. Police said the suspects will be charged with robbery.

Washington College of Law Graduates 130 in Largest Class

Most Degrees Ever Awarded at One Time in School's History; 5 Are Made Masters; Senator Brown Is Commencement Speaker

Degrees were awarded to 135 students as the largest class in the history of the Washington College of Law were graduated in exercises last night Memorial Continental Hall.

Senator Brown, of Michigan, was the commencement speaker. He was introduced by Grace Hays Riley, dean, who presided.

The program was opened with an invocation by the Rev. George J. Grewenow, pastor of Faith Lutheran Church, Arlington. Prizes for outstanding scholastic work were presented by Henry A. Schweinhaut, special assistant to the Attorney General and a member of the faculty.

Degrees were bestowed by Dean Riley, and Dr. Edwin C. Dutton, president of the board of trustees, conferred master of laws degrees upon five post-graduate students.

Prizes and Scholarships

Prizes and scholarships for general excellence of scholarship and recognition for services in extra-curricular activities were awarded as follows:

Gold medals for the highest and second highest standard of scholarship during the entire three-year course—First prize, Albert Heath Sheaffer, jr.; second prize, Elizabeth Espey Koonce.

350,000 Drivers Lack Permits; Rush Expected

Richmond, Va., June 9 (AP).—The division of motor vehicles began preparing today for a June rush for drivers' permits.

Approximately 350,000 drivers have renewed their permits for the new three-year period, but another 350,000 have not made their applications. The deadline is June 30.

Carpenters Willing to Compromise

Union Will Accept $13, 8-Hour Day, Master Builders Group Is Informed

Carpenters Union officials last night offered to accept a $13 8-hour day in order to settle the dispute between the Carpenters District Council and the Master Builders' Association before Monday, the date set for a walkout on all construction jobs in the District.

Previous demands of the carpenters were for a 7-hour day at $13. They now receive $12 for an 8-hour day. Union leaders predicted that individual builders would sign contracts on the new terms even if the Master Builders' Association remained adamant.

The two factions met yesterday afternoon upon the call of Labor Department Conciliator Howard T. Colvin. No decision was reached at the meeting, but an emergency session of the carpenters was immediately agreed upon. It was understood that a new offer by the workers would emerge from the meeting "if it takes us until daylight," as one member of the council said.

Meanwhile Conciliator Colvin announced that another representative of the Labor Department had been appointed to assist him.

Colvin said the new man would be assigned to the dispute between Bakers' Union, Local 118, and the Employer Bakers Association. The results of a strike poll conducted Thursday will be announced at a meeting of the employes at 10 a. m. today in the Typographical Temple.

Colvin was in contact with both sides yesterday but was unable to bring them together to negotiate, he said. Union officials expected an overwhelming vote for a strike. If the motion carries 3 to 4 the bakers will begin the strike tonight.

Over 100 construction jobs remained tied up as the building laborers, on strike for more than a week, awaited the outcome of negotiations of the carpenters.

Lieut. Bargagni, 60, Retires From Fire Department

Lieut. A. J. Bargagni, 60, originator of the annual Labor Day parade of District firemen and policemen of former years and an honorary member of 57 volunteer fire organizations, yesterday was retired from the Fire Department by the Commissioners.

BARGAGNI

Commended for his work in the Knickerbocker disaster in 1922 and in the Kann's Warehouse fire in 1925, Lieut. Bargagni will become chief of the Bethesda (Md.) Fire Department July 1.

He was appointed to the service in 1901, made a sergeant in 1925 and a lieutenant in 1936.

Lieut. Bargagni taught the first classes in fire fighting in the States of Virginia and Maryland. He has been doing that work for 20 years.

In 1929 he was assigned assistant drill master at the local fire school. For the past few years he has been attached to the No. 1 truck company.

200 Couples Dance At Manor Club

Almost 200 young couples gathered at the Manor Club near Norbeck, Md., last night for the first dance of the Montgomery County Cotillion Club, recently organized under the sponsorship of scions of well-known Maryland families.

Restricted by the board of governors to an "invitation only" membership, the Cotillion promises to become one of the outstanding events in Montgomery County.

Last night's dance is the first of many as "the purpose of this club is to hold semiannually a strictly closed and invitational Cotillion, a custom firmly and traditionally established in many other localities," according to the governing board.

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Diamond 3d, led the "figure" at last night's function. Special dance arrangements were provided by the Leroy Thayer Studios.

Costars Myrna Loy And Robert Taylor; Crack Stage Show

"LUCKY NIGHT." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Oliver Claxton, adapted to the screen by Vincent Lawrence and Grover Jones, costarring Myrna Loy and Robert Taylor, with Joseph Allen, Henry O'Neill, Douglas Fowley, Bernard Nedell, Bernadene Hayes, Gladys Blake, Charles Lane, Marjorie Main, Edward Gargan, Irving Bacon and Oscar O'Shea. Directed by Norman Taurog. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Capitol Theater.

With a slice of whacky here and a splatter of whimsy there, "Lucky Night" yesterday took over the Capitol screen, while a truly diversified variety bill captured the stage.

International feeling still has the big F street house whipped up to a flag-waving boiling point. A shako-topped sentry takes your tickets, Maestro Phil Lampkin has arranged a red, white and blue overture as a salute to Flag Day and several of the variety acts boast command performances.

In the film, Robert Taylor is something of a machine-age Peter Pan. He just wants to have fun. When he has a couple of dollars he'd prefer to spend it on the races in hopes of a fortune, but, most important, some fun, instead of paying the household bills. He hates to think of earning his living at a desk. He likes to borrow money with only the intention, and not the means, to pay it back. Most of all, he hates Mondays.

Marry in Haste

He is, in other words, exactly like the rest of us, only he has no inhibitions. He has what he likes to call ideas. When he picked up Myrna Loy on a park bench and found that she liked to do uninhibited things, like picking up other people's tips, life looked pretty fine and they treated themselves to one evening of unadulterated fun. They made so much money at it, that by dawn they were man and wife!

Of course, Myrna is a wealthy heiress who, along with her champagne pocketbook, has a beer appetite and when they discover that they are Mr. and Mrs. nothing will do but to stick it out in a three-room flat with a potted tree on the fire escape. It is here that the comedy gets a bit weary, with Bernard Shaw-length speeches. There is much confused talk that, in an effort to be pleasantly philosophical, is merely tiresome, a matter which slows the piece up considerably. How it all comes out is going too much out on a limb to say, because, so far as we could see, at the end of the battle of actions vs. ideas, things were still at a draw.

Actually Miss Loy and Taylor are the entire action of the film. The camera is always focused on one or the other of them. They are both as personable as usual, although a trifle nonplused by the Barrie-Shaw combination. What other characters there are, are sharply etched by fine, if not famous actors; the dry official of Charles Lane whom Taylor talks into letting him have a job and the understanding cop of William Gargan are two of these.

Treacher Tops Stage Bill

The vaudeville bill is the best we've seen in a long time and has that essential quality of the true variety bill, diversity.

Arthur Treacher, who has butled in more pictures than even he could probably tell you, headlines, with some expert help from Jack Norton, whose drunk act you have seen him do in the films. Jeeves-ish Treacher leaves the Hollywood generalities alone and indulges in some characteristic cross-talk and is finally coaxed into doing that dance he and Shirley Temple did in "The Little Princess." Genuinely amusing, he won an ovation yesterday afternoon.

Jack La Vier has a dizzy act of a walrus-faced Cockney on a flying trapeze and the Dorn Brothers and Mary are a knowing and successful harmony trio. Al Stone and Tish Lee, Americans who have made good on the British networks, reveal that the British sense of humor prefers jokes that are very raw and very obvious. Enters and Borgia contribute expert ball-room dancing and the Rhythm Rockets change the guard effectively.

Evelyn Tyner closes the bill with some flashy piano playing that is a wow with the audience and is later joined by the Capitol's own pianist and the Rockets ensconced at miniature pianos to give a bang-up finale to a cracker-jack stage show.

The wide-awake newsreel cameras, bringing you to the very front row of the crowd where you very likely were not on Thursday, have some excellent shots of the royal parade, winding up a bill that is generous and amusing.

Columbia

The Hardys always stay for repeat engagements in Washington, so you may see "The Hardys Ride High," to the tune of their two million dollar inheritance, this week at the Columbia.

Seeming to be practically a Nation-wide cult, the Hardys can put a movie audience in the best of humor of any Hollywood combination which comes readily to mind. Waves of gentle chuckles and gales of neighing laughter accompany the relating of young Andy Hardy's adventures.

Andy's father and mother are fine prototypes of parents, and Andy and his sister, among them, run the gamut of growing pains. Ever so often the children will seem about to disappoint their father, but the seeds of his teachings always are fruitful in the end.

In this episode we see the family turmoiled by the legacy dumped in their laps, with each lapping it up in his own style. That they eventually decide the money would be a great bother is almost a foregone conclusion. The manner in which they make their decision, and the steps leading up to it are genially exciting. The Hardys would seem to be a part of the growing score of Americana in which each of us has a part, however passive.

Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Fay Holden, Cecilia Parker and Ann Rutherford play their familiar roles in the Hardy family series. There is a chorus girl added, temporarily, who tempts Andy for all of five minutes.

Australia is the topic of a Fitz-Patrick travelogue, done in almost too glowing colors. "While America Sleeps" depicts the contemptible and dangerous menace of foreign spies in the aviation factories of the Nation. It is replete with Hollywood's newfound nationalism.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

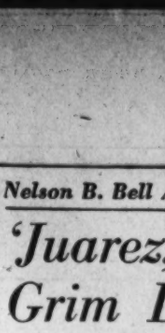
Paul Muni, Bette Davis, Brian Aherne Star; Flashy Stage Revue Pursues Spanish Motif

"JUAREZ." Warner Brothers picturization of a screen play by John Huston, Aeneas MacKenzie and Wolfgang Reinhardt, based on a play by Franz Werfel and the novel, "The Phantom Crown," by Berrita Harding, costarring Paul Muni and Bette Davis, with Brian Aherne, Claude Rains, John Garfield, Donald Crisp, Joseph Calleia, Gale Sondergaard, Gilbert Roland, Henry O'Neill, Pedro de Cordoba, Montagu Love, Harry Davenport, Robert Warwick, John Miljan, Hugh Sothern, Irving Pichel, Frank Reicher, Walter Kingsford, Monte Blue, Louis Calhern, Grant Mitchell and scores more. Directed by William Dieterle. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Earle Theater.

It is a sweeping drama of a bitter struggle for freedom below the Rio Grande that is revealed upon the screen in "Juarez," the Warner Brothers production which yesterday opened its premiere Washington engagement on the screen at the Earle Theater. In time and the vital import of its events to Mexico, "Juarez" fairly parallels the historical importance of the War Between the States to this country.



BELL

The basic purpose of the picture is to point the battle for supremacy in Mexico between the people, led by their Zapotec Indian President, Benito Juarez, representing the forces of democracy, and the Emperor Maximilian, tricked onto the throne of Mexico by the wily duplicity of Napoleon III, intent on salvaging a lost cause. There are many other elements of drama woven into the warp and woof of the play, however, that may be relied upon to capture the fascinated interest of those who pay scant heed to historical drama that is reasonably authentic—a fine contrast of characters, great and small; glamour, pageantry, scenes of stirring battle, more than a suggestion of pathos and, finally, tragedy.

A Titanic Struggle

No two figures in the same play could be more sharply contrasted than Benito Juarez and the Emperor Maximilian, duped into a desperate situation by a counterfeit plebiscite, engineered by Napoleon. Juarez, the Indian, is a grim, determined, relentless patriot whose only aim is to free his people from the tyranny of foreign dictatorship. Maximilian is a suave, gracious and kindly monarch, whose ambitions for the freedom and happiness of the Mexican people, over whom he has been bogusly set to rule, are identical with those of the man who has pledged himself to rid Mexico of monarchial rule. The film's major conflict is waged between these two.

There are, nevertheless, minor struggles for power within Juarez' own ranks that lend the drama added interest and zest. By the sheer force of his own personality and his hold upon his people, Juarez is able to crush the revolt that is inspired and fostered by his vice president, Uradi. He then proceeds to the elimination of Maximilian, as a threat to democracy, before the firing squad.

These, of course, are only the major motivations of a play that pursues so many ramifications that to detail its plot comprehensively in the short space of a review would be impossible. The divergent elements which comprise the body of "Juarez" are skillfully welded into a drama of such impressiveness and power that it must be reckoned with when time comes to choose the year's "ten best."

"Juarez," furthermore, is superlatively well played. Paul Muni, in the title role, presents one of his most notable characterizations, assuming a Lincolnian mien that reflects the admiration the Mexican Liberator felt for the American President. This may be stretching fact a bit, but it is effective. Bette Davis, as Carlota, wife of Maximilian, who loses her mind when the court of Napoleon III offers her only rebuffs and insults when she pleads for aid for her doomed husband, displays many moods and a degree of dramatic fire she seldom before has revealed. Brian Aherne, in the role of Maximilian, is the most sympathetic character in the play. His portrayal embraces full grasp of every opportunity to make his part the outstanding one in the play.

Stage Revue Excels

The supporting players are so numerous as to preclude individual acclaim for uniformly excellent performances. Claude Rains, Gale Sondergaard, Donald Crisp, John Garfield, John Miljan, Joseph Calleia, Montagu Love and many more might be singled out, but the scores of others in the cast are equally deserving of personal accolades.

In harmony with the Mexican atmosphere of the feature picture, Production Manager Harry Anger this week presents a stage revue at the Earle that is also highly colored with Spanish rhythms, settings and costumes. Into a compact and picturesque revue have been woven the clever specialties of Earline King, who sings with the orchestra; Glen Pope, a debonair prestidigitator; those zany dancers, Barr and Estes; the singing Virginians and the 16 Earle Roxeyettes. While no individual act is of the "smash" variety, they are combined in such a manner as to give the impression, after it is all over, that one has witnessed a better-than-ordinary miniature musical.

The Paramount News, featuring complete views of Thursday's welcome to royalty—for the greater part in illuminating close-ups—augments a feature that must be rated among the best that have come out of Hollywood.

Jitterbug Army Hoofs for Krupa

Two hundred and seventeen jitterbugs danced to the music of Drummer Boy Gene Krupa for a spectacular scene in the new Bob Hope-Shirley Ross comedy, "Some Like It Hot," at Paramount.

Le Roy Prinz, studio dance director, selected the jitterbugs after lengthy auditions of most of the film colony's dancers.

The Savior of Mexican Freedom

PAUL MUNI

as he appears in the role of Benito Juarez, the Indian President of the Mexican Republic, who fought a valiant fight against the tyranny of European aggression. Bette Davis is costarred with Muni and Brian Aherne leads a long and distinguished supporting cast in the role of Maximilian

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, June 9.

JIM FARLEY: The Republican National Committee is preparing a file on Chip Robert, secretary of the Democratic National Committee, in connection with the moving of New England textile mills to the South . . . Neville Chamberlain: The State Department just learned that two weeks ago there was a clash between Polish and German troops near the border and that there were some casualties. Both governments decided to hush the affair . . . Bill Buckner: The United States Attorney's office expects that when you open your defense, Loretta Young will be near you in the courtroom.

WILL HAYS: For the first time since her marriage to John Barrymore, Elaine Barrie's services are being offered to the movie companies, with no reference to her husband. Heretofore all of Barrymore's contracts contained a proviso that Elaine is to be engaged for the same picture and be paid a salary—whether she appears in the completed movie or not . . . John, incidentally, will terminate his current touring engagement and return to Hollywood to settle his affairs.

NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER: All the Paul Robeson biographies report that he was graduated from Columbia Law School. Robeson admitted this week that he never went to your school. He was graduated from New York University's law school in 1919 . . . George Bernard Shaw: The New Yorker Magazine wanted to publish a profile about your wife, but she refused to permit any of her friends to write one . . . Babe Ruth: Frank Merriwell, the most famous baseball character in boyhood fiction, will be revived—in a radio sketch in which he will fight for tolerance and democracy. The Council Against Intolerance has Gilbert Patten's permission to use the Merriwell characters in a series of broadcasts.

LAZARO CARDENAS: Two weeks ago Francisco Sarabia, Mexico's most noted aviator, told a New York Times reporter here that, although he had been a flier for many years, he never had sustained a scratch . . . "Not a scratch have I ever got," Sarabia repeated, "and I never will" . . . Sarabia was killed when his plane fell into the Potomac . . . He died of submersion and a broken neck—but his body didn't reveal a single scratch.

DIXIE DAVIS: Didn't you see Hope Dare while you were being removed from your jail at eight-hour stretches? Hope spent many hours outside of Dewey's office last week . . . Darryl Zanuck: Sam Pokrass, one of your ace song writers, came East a few days ago, and the change affected his health. He's now a patient at the General Hospital in New Britain, Conn. . . . Grover Whalen: The hotelmen's disappointment at the World's Fair trade has resulted in internal squabbles. As a result, the Hotelmen's Association may disband . . . Eduard Benes: You have a strange distinction now. The students at the University of Chicago, where you teach, voted you the most outstanding student.

GERTRUDE NIESEN: You'll have to substitute for Morton Downey at the Bon-Air Country Club in Chicago . . . Although Downey had been engaged to work at that club, Billy Rose exercised his option on Morton's services and is retaining him at the Aquacade. Rose was willing to permit Downey to leave, on condition that James Melton could be secured as a replacement. When Melton expressed reluctance, Rose assured him that it would be advisable to relinquish his current work and sing four shows a day while Eleanor Holm and Johnnie Weissmuller swam . . . "I prefer my present job," Melton replied. "I'm working—for the Metropolitan Opera."

BENNY GOODMAN: Teddy Powell, the song-writer who wrote "Boots and Saddles," is becoming a band leader. He's signed your brother, Irving, to be his trombonist . . . Chorus Equity: George White will have a chorus call next Tuesday at the Alvin Theater . . . Broadway Association: Mae West already has been impressed by the lack of business on Broadway—and so she has canceled her plan to produce her play next month and will return, instead, to Hollywood . . . Walter Wanger: Herbert Bayard Swope, the man you wanted for the role of the President in "Gabriel Over the White House," made his drama debut by appearing before the television camera at the Columbia Broadcasting Studio.

'Nazi Spy' Is Feature at Metropolitan

Daring Exposure of Espionage Activities Resumes Run

Hollywood registers a bulls-eye for courage, timeliness and the tackling of a great current problem in "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," now at the Metropolitan. It's to be hoped that it marks the start of a cycle of even finer and braver interpretations of this world of 1939.

Don't let this pronouncement on the noble aims of "Confessions of a N. S." get you down. The picture is splendid entertainment, too, especially if you are a faithful reader of the world's great daily medium of diversion, the newspapers. It gives you the human background, the colorful lowdown, the tangled beginnings of the intrigues that flower in espionage trials. It thoroughly debunks the glamour of "international spies," allowing you to see these little folk as they usually are—pathetic pawns in a soiled game that has no rule, except one—"Devil take the hindmost."

Unexpectedly great acting glorifies the picture. Paul Lukas, heretofore always the saccharine romantic hero, is powerful as a "bund" leader who turns Judas under pressure and is reached by the long arm of the Gestapo. Francis Lederer, star "glamour boy" of the first water, sheds glamour to play tremendously as a weakling egotist who fancies himself as a spy. It's the best dramatic chore he's done since he came to the United States—and he has never turned in anything less than a fine interpretation. Both Lukas and Lederer are native Austrians. Don't tell us that their hearts weren't in their roles.

Star Is Outpaced

America's own ace dramatic star Edward G. Robinson, plays well, too, as an executive of the FBI. But for this time, Lukas and Lederer top him in dramatic power. It may be a matter of opportunity, for his part is a restrained one.

No end of good work is done by character actors in the roles of German puppets of the Gestapo. You get the atmosphere of Manhattan's Yorkville section and its beer places, the built-up discipline created by German propaganda.

If there is to be a fault found with "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," it is in a certain precision of view, as opposed to broadness. If Hollywood is going to interpret the big and significant international trends, it would be well to do it in the grand and understanding manner—to remember that while one axis of power is indignant at certain wrongs, singing its own hymns of patriotism, that the folks on the other side of the border are burning over their own mishaps, shouting their own anthems. Only in understanding lies the remedy for the great international misunderstandings that wrack the world.

Plenty of attractive shorts round out the generous Metropolitan program. If you didn't see the King and Queen, don't be too sorry for yourself. The newsreel will show you more of their progress than if you'd been in the front row on the Avenue, let alone standing among the dozens deep as you probably did.

MARY HARRIS.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, June 9 (INS).—The Paramount conventioners let out a wild cheer today when they were told that Mary Martin, of "My Heart Belongs To Daddy" fame, plays opposite Allan Jones in "Victor Herbert." William Lebaron, who knows music probably better than any other Hollywood producer, and who personally worked with "Victor Herbert" in the days when both were making Marion Davies' pictures at the New York Cosmopolitan Studios, will personally handle the Herbert operetta.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Naturally, Mary won't sing "My Heart Belongs To Daddy." But maybe you'll remember it was her operatic voice that first intrigued Hollywood when she sang at the Trocadero. I mentioned in my column at the time that here was a movie discovery for Hollywood. But she had to go to New York and make herself famous before the movies could see her. Andrew Stone, as we told you, is the director and Mary reports to him in Hollywood July 1.

Finally, after many starts, "It Can't Happen Here," Sinclair Lewis' iconoclastic novel, has been indefinitely postponed. While no one will say so, I have an idea this action was taken after "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" failed to make as much of a dent at the box office as everyone expected. "Juarez" has exceeded it by a big margin. The Lewis novel, the M.-G.-M. feels, presents a wrong picture of world affairs now, especially since everyone is trying to promote peace instead of chaos and disorder. Lewis Stone and Edward Arnold were already committed for the movie and considerable money had already been spent, both for the film rights and treatments.

Whether our old friend, George Bernard Shaw, likes it or not, Constance Cummings plays the lead on the London stage in his "St. Joan" and "The Devil's Disciple" opposite Robert Donat. When Connie met Shaw, she said she would like to have him see her enact a character in one of his plays before he gave his official approval. "You can't tell whether I can act by simply talking to me," she said. "Maybe not," he answered, "but I can tell whether you cannot act." But apparently he approved, for starting July 4, Connie and Donat will appear for four months in the Shaw plays, also "Lady Macbeth" and "Romeo and Juliet." That means we won't see Donat for another six months, at least.

Chatter in Hollywood: Without any publicity or fanfare, Ann Harding arrived home today accompanied by her bridegroom, Werner Janssen. Off the screen since she married the well-known orchestra director, she has decided to return to the movies. After all, Ann is an actress and an excellent one, and her husband, to whom she is happily wed, has his career. So why should she bury her talent under a bushel? Jane Bannister, her daughter, is getting to be a big girl, so Ann will consider several offers made her. Janssen appears at the Hollywood Bowl this summer and will remain here for several months.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Woolie Donahue and Sonny Whitney are the house guests of Constance Bennett. Woolie, who admires Connie's sister, Joan, extravagantly, dancing with her at the Troc in a party with Eleanor Thompson and Randy Scott. It was a farewell for Miss Thompson to whom Randy has lost his heart; Hunt Stromberg, jr., may become a serious threat to the publicity experts in our town. He handled the show at Cumnock, his alma mater, so efficiently. His dad, Hunt, sr., started as a publicist and hasn't done badly. Janet Beecher's son, Wyndham, graduated in the same class with Hunt, jr., and took honors in the play; Aileen Pringle, who promises to wire as soon as she and Nicholas Murray say "I do," said au revoir to her pals at a cocktail buffet supper Billy Haines gave her. A fish-net table, spread with a huge shell topped by flowers, was much admired; Aileen looked so smart in a black and white print with a huge orchid corsage; Mrs. Raoul Walsh, Mrs. Charles Feldman, Peggy Fears and some of our other beauties wore the fillmiest of summer frocks; Eileen Percy came in light pajamas, while Lella Hyams Berg looked cool in a thin tailored suit.

Edith Gwynne Wilkerson, back from New York, talked of nothing but the World's Fair; Addison Randall with Louise Stanley, and she really is a very pretty girl. Don't let Ad kid you if he says he isn't deeply in love with her; Frances Marion was one of the early arrivals and I couldn't help but think how well she looks; Orry Kelly, Warner's expert stylist, told us he leaves in two weeks for his native Australia to visit his mother; Constance Talmadge made the acquaintance of her namesake, Constance Collier, Buster Collier's 2-year-old; Doris Kenyon arrived home today after having obtained her divorce, and from now on she will forget the name Lasker; wonder why Frank Orsatti denied he had remarried his ex, Jean Chatburn, in New York. Understand the Eastern papers carried the story; Frances Langford, Jon Hall and Dorothy Lamour among those helping the Frank Borzages celebrate their wedding anniversary.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Film Sleuths Lunch Sans Clews

Two famous detectives lunched together at Paramount when Warren William, portraying the role of Philo Vance in "The Gracie Allen Murder Case," and John Howard, enacting the part of "Bulldog Drummond," found themselves at the same table in the cafe.

Later they were joined by Gracie Allen, also portraying a detective role in the picture named for her.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., June 9.—What price education? Not much in Hollywood, where types count for more than brains, and a carload of degrees couldn't get you past DeMille's fifth assistant!

HOPPER

Took a look at "Disputed Passage." Jack Howard gets his first big break in that picture, after playing four years in "Bs" at the same studio. He has a master's degree, is a Phi Theta Kappa and qualified to teach any time he takes a notion to. But the star of the picture, Dottie Lamour, used to start elevators in the days when she hadn't even heard of a sarong.

Plenty of our stars and leading men and women know the meaning of hard work. Fred MacMurray was swinging a pick before he got his big break and Ellen Drew was serving you razzberry in your soda!

Pat O'Brien and Spencer Tracy 20 years ago were working in a brickyard in Milwaukee. Pat left, went on the stage, and two years later was back to persuade Spencer to join him. Tracy did, and that's how Academy Award winners are born.

You see, it's the heart that counts, and how much of it you're able to put across to your audience that's important in pictures. And not what school you attended.

Lovely little Linda Ware is so terrific in "The Starmaker" that she's being rushed right into "A Star in Manhattan" when she finishes the first picture. With two "stars" to her credit, she'll probably be one herself by the time she makes a third! I watched her do a scene with Walter Damrosch and his 100-piece orchestra. At the conclusion of her song, Damrosch was supposed to kiss her, but he was so enthused he grabbed her harder than he should and they had to take it again. Incidentally, she's 14—just the age at which Deanna Durbin got her start.

And did you know Deanna is the sweetheart of Japan at the moment? They love her.

Like other countries, you can't get money out of that country. Only person who's fooled them so far is Henry Ford. He waited until his cars broke down and wouldn't send parts to fix 'em until he'd been paid.

But getting back to music. Basil Rathbone insisted to me that he has to learn to play Bach on a violin for his next picture, "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes." And after daily rehearsing for correct technique, posture and the rest of it for "Intermezzo," Leslie Howard looks so professional—does everything but play.

Did John Garfield do a burn when he saw his face on that cooking manual? And not a slow one, either! Which reminded me of the time I made a "he-man" salad before 3,500 women at a cooking school. Don't ask me what I put in it! But Gary Cooper says he wouldn't mind having his photo on a cookbook—he's right proud of his culinary skill. Says he learned on a ranch where he lived on duck, chicken and apricot pie. And, believe it or not, he used to ride 2 miles to the next ranch to take cooking lessons. Ye Gods, now I HAVE heard everything!

Judy Garland's so delighted they have named a sandwich after her at Reubens! That's one of the marks of fame, Judy.

Director Sidney Lanfield, on coming out of the studio cafe, ran into a palpitating visitor who rushed up to him and asked, "Please point out a famous director to me." "Yes, lady, there's one."

It was Gregory Ratoff! That's fame, too.

After Groucho Marx, in a cigar-lighting scene, used up 18 cigars, he finally yelled: "Say, what is this? 'A Day at the Circus' or 'Tobacco Road'?"

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Cleveland, June 9.—This may be a foul trick on Bobby Estalella, but we are constrained to observe that the big muscled little Cuban bears all the earmarks of a providential reply to Bucky Harris' supplications for a guy who can wallop the ball. It may be a foul trick because one word of praise from this department, and the whammy is on the unfortunate subject.

POVICH

It always has been. It's known sometimes as the Povich curse. This pillar of type would be better captioned "Abandon hope all ye who are praised herein." Back in 1933, when Heinie Manush was threatening George Sisler's record with a safe hit in 38 consecutive games, we typed a long tribute to Manush's hitting ability. And that afternoon Manush went hitless for the first time in 39 games.

Beau Bell, of the Browns, came to Washington a couple of years ago bearing a batting average of .360. We broke into print with our choicest descriptives of Bell as a hitter. For every superlative we flung, a Washington pitcher struck Bell out. He didn't make a hit during the series. The Povich curse threw him off stride, ruined his timing and reduced him to utter helplessness.

We casually mentioned the beauty of the chimes of Big Ben in London Tower and you may have read how the clock stopped. Ten days ago we touted the Venezuelan, Alex Alexandra, as the prize rookie of 1939. He was knocked out of the box in his next two starts. On an afternoon in St. Louis earlier in the week, we described the Nats as a lackadaisical, gumptionless outfit, and 20 minutes later they swatted six runs across the plate in the ninth inning to win a ball game.

A Powerful Little Fellow at the Plate

This thing has been going on for some time now. We told our mom we were going to grow up to be a sailor, and look what has happened. A dripping faucet is enough to induce mal de mer. We called the Yankees invincible a few days ago, and they promptly lost two in a row. We laughed down Tony Galento as a heavyweight challenger and Mike Jacobs signed him pronto for a match with Louis.

For Estalella, we have the kindest regard, but it is our painful duty to set down the fact that he is a powerful fellow with the Nats at this writing. Because Estalella is swinging his bat with the most powerful stroke brought to the plate by a Washington athlete since the salad days of Goose Goslin, a portion of Bucky Harris' worries have vanished.

The little Cuban is truly something to see as the Nats pursue their uncertain course through the West. He is laying the wood to the ball in a manner that has left the fans of Chicago, of St. Louis and of Cleveland gasping. Two-baggers and home runs have rocketed off his bat with amazing frequency, and folks wonder where the ingrown little outfielder gets his enormous drive.

He gets it, of course, from his thick wrists, his broad back and his piano legs. Football coaches would call him a big little man on the order of Davy O'Brien. His favorite dish unlike the words of the song, is fast ball pitching. But he is not the awful chump he used to be on a curve. A goodly portion of his extra base hits was achieved by straightening out some of those they threw him.

Does Fine Work Under a Handicap

It's difficult to detract from the little guy's ability to sock the ball because, for one thing, he's up there at the plate under a terrific handicap. He's there under the handicap of knowing that they'll dust him off, because that's what they've been doing all around the league. There are pitchers who don't like his complexion. Bob Feller very deliberately brushed him back a couple of times this afternoon.

The idea, of course, is to keep Estalella loose up there at the plate, to discourage him from taking the toehold that produces those long wallops. But apparently Bobby doesn't scare easily, because in the last ten games he has made 16 hits, six of them two-baggers, and four of 'em homers. And when they've been getting him out, outfielders have had to dash back to the fences to haul down his long drives.

That .386 batting average Estalella compiled in the Piedmont League last summer is rapidly being understood. He isn't hitting .300 yet, but he has been coming along after a dull start. His start was so dull, in fact, that Bucky Harris was on the verge of giving up on the little Cuban. It was in desperation that he restored him to the lineup in Washington two weeks ago. That was the best thing that happened to the Nats this season.

With CONSIDINE

Philadelphia, June 9.—The only really happy spectator at the United States Open yesterday, when the sun threatened to turn the Spring Mill course into a dust bowl, was a man named Jones. Perspiring freely, and carrying his sports coat over one damp arm, he sauntered along in the best of spirits, this man Jones did. And when the sun got at it's blazingest, this Jones strolled down the hill, found a cool corner in the clubhouse bar and sighed.

CONSIDINE

"It used to be a lot of fun playing in these things," said Jones, whose first name is Bobby, "but it's a lot more fun not playing in them. Boy, let me have a lemonade."

Mr. Jones sipped his frosted drink a moment. "I had 15 years of this. That's more than a stomach full."

It's been nine years now since Jones played in the Open and the general opinion is that if he were tossed into this 1939 tournament tomorrow—possessed of the 1930 form that made him the greatest golfer in history—he'd be a dismal also ran. The game has improved that much in less than a decade, most people believe.

"Sure, golf's improving," Jones asserted. "It's better now than it was when I was playing. Everything in sport is. That's evolution, so why shouldn't golf get better too? I'd say that the top players of today—Guldahl, Snead, Cooper, Picard and those fellows—are a stroke a round better than we were. They win those 72-hole tournaments around 284. We used to win them around 288.

Kids Learn More Quickly These Days

We asked him if they were turning out better men these days.

"Yes and no," he considered. "A kid starting golf today knows more about it in a week than I did in a couple of months. The pros know more today; there are greater facilities for playing the game all over the country. The game is breeding better players all over the country. But the thing that has made the real difference, I think, is the improvement in equipment. Steel shafts, matched clubs, and balls that are uniform. Ten years ago you could find as much as 15 yards difference in two balls of the same make and price. It meant the difference of landing on a green or falling in a trap.

"The greens are a lot better today than they were even 10 years ago," Bobby asserted. "The greens committee of the United States Golf Association has spent hundreds of thousands of bucks studying greens. They're a lot truer today. They'll get better too. So will the equipment. I don't know what the saturation point will be . . . I mean the limit of human skill. But I do think that in 10 more years there will be players who look upon these wonderful scores of Snead and Guldahl as old fashioned."

Jones sees no reason to give up on the amateurs, though they have been able to win only one of the last nine Opens.

Amateur Must Devote Full Time to Golf

"One of them'll come along one of these days. Look at what this fellow Bud Ward did today. Sixty-nine. That put him ahead of Armour, Dutra, Wood, Picard, Horton Smith, Johnny Revolta, Bryon Nelson and a lot of good pros. Sure, another amateur will win the Open. Yates? Well, I don't know. He's got a job that keeps him working pretty hard. To play up in this league nowadays, an amateur has to devote most of his time to golf.

"I used to work, too. But a week or two before every tournament I'd get out of Atlanta to get away from work, and the thought of work. After a certain point, golf's mostly a matter of concentration, and you can't concentrate on it properly when you've got work to do."

Jones thinks that the next amateur who wins the Open will be aided no little by inevitable collapse of some of the leading pros.

"I used to play in four or five tournaments a year," recalled the man who retired after winning every important tournament in the world in 1930. "In 1930 I played in six—the Savannah, the Augusta, the British and American Opens and Amateurs. That was a lot for me. I was really physically exhausted at the end of each one, because of the mental strain that goes with concentration. But look at Snead. Sam must have played in 30 or 35 tournaments last year, probably more. That would kill me. For the life of me I can't see how he and some of those others keep fresh.

"Maybe their brand of concentration is better than ours was. I know what concentration I had I've lost. I've had a couple 66's down home this spring, but the next day it would be 78."

London Gets Track and Field Games in 1944; Herr Hitler's Personal Invitation for Event Is Accepted at London Conference

By the Associated Press.

London, June 9.—The international Olympic committee scrambled out of a tight corner tonight by accepting Adolf Hitler's personal invitation to hold the 1940 winter Olympics at Garmisch-Partenkirchen in the Bavarian Alps.

At the same time the committee awarded the 1944 summer games to London and the 1944 winter competition to Cortina d'Ampezzo, in Italy. Bids of Detroit for the summer games and Montreal for the winter sports were defeated, the latter by a small margin of 4 votes.

Faced with a flat refusal by Swiss Olympic officials to run the 1940 winter games under Olympic rules, cables were sent to Oslo, Norway; Lake Placid, N. Y., and Montreal. The replies were not encouraging. Oslo said it was holding the international ski championships next winter and Lake Placid said it was too short notice. Montreal said it would take the games if there absolutely was no other way out, but it did not want to prejudice chances of getting the 1944 games.

The difficulty was solved by Ger-

Two Virginia Horses Win At Upperville

By Anne Hagner

A Special Correspondent.

Upperville, Va., June 9.—More tradition than New York's National Horse Show; more atmosphere than the Atlantic City Show—such is the forty-ninth annual Upperville Colt and Horse Show, which opened a two-day stand at Grafton Farm, near here, today.

Appropriately enough, two Virginia-bred horses divided early honors in the Old Dominion's oldest and most famous equine event. Miss Pat, a 4-year-old daughter of Espino—Patrick's Day, and Goshen, a bay gelding by My Broom—Epie, each won two classes to place themselves among the day's biggest winners. Miss Pat, a well-mannered chestnut owned by Horace Moffett and ridden by Tommy Cooke, scored in the classes for 3 and 4 year olds, suitable to become hunters, and hunters, 4-year-olds and under, over more than 40 of the best young stock in the East. In addition, she picked up several seconds and thirds in other hunter classes to be a consistent winner.

Goshen, a big 3-year-old gelding owned by Benton Stables, of Middleburg, won the lead-in class for half-bred 3-year-olds and another large class for middle and heavyweights, suitable to become hunters.

In the morning classes, which drew an enthusiastic crowd, Ernest Redmon's good stable of half-bred hunters triumphed often enough to make his personable youngsters most frequent winners of their division. Grand Tiger, a bay son of Tom Tiger, defeated a sizable field of half-bred yearlings and other Redmon representatives won minor awards in various 2-year-old and brood mare events.

One of the most interesting of the morning classes was the exhibition of pure-bred draft stallions, which called out seven huge contenders whose nickerings resounded around the picturesque show ring. After long deliberation an imported Belgian, a 4-year-old stallion named Maison de Malmaison, won over Edward R. Johnston's Boxted Confider. The winner is

Tribe Defeats Nats in Ninth Inning, 3-2

Heath Hits Homer And Early Drops Ball In Fatal Last Frame

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, June 9.—Ken Chase went down to a brutal defeat this afternoon when the Cleveland Indians came up with a pair of last-ditch, ninth-inning runs to lick the Nats, 3 to 2. For Chase it was a cruel climax to what had been a superlative pitching performance.

The young southpaw from Oneonta, N. Y., had outpitched the great Bob Feller for eight innings, yielding only one hit to the Indians until the game crashed down about his ears in the ninth.

Carrying a 2-1 lead into that ninth, Chase struck out Jeff Heath to start the inning, and then Hal Trosky unsheathed his fifth home run of the season—a high blast over the rightfield wall to tie the score. Trosky ambled around the bases to the chorus of 9,000 shrieking ladies' day fans.

That was the extent of Chase's culpability in the defeat, but not the end of his misfortunes. Because after getting two out, he actually retired the side by striking out Joe Grimes, only to see Rookie Catcher Jake Early let the strike get away for a passed ball and enable Grimes to reach first with the winning run.

Three of the four hits Chase allowed, the Indians packed into that ninth inning, and two of their ninth inning blows were luck annointed affairs. Sammy Hale moved Grimes to second with a broken bat hit into short right field, and after Chase wild pitched Grimes to third, came the awful denouement.

Lewis and Wright Star

Pitcher Johnny Broaca was at bat for the Indians and Manager Oscar Vitt lifted him in favor of Frankie Pytlak. Off Pytlak's bat bounced a high fly that would have been an easy out in any other park in the league, but a stiff wind carried it out of the reach of Rightfielder Johnny Welaj who saw the ball drop against the rightfield wall 2 feet above his head, for a single that drove in the winning run.

Until that ninth inning surge, Chase appeared to have a spectacular victory over Feller in his possession. His fast ball was baffling the Indians, and despite the seven walks he issued, he was rarely in trouble. Feller, after allowing the Nats five hits, was lifted for a pinch hitter in the eighth.

Buddy Lewis and Taft Wright were the gents who actually wrung the Nats' runs out of Feller. They did it with a pair of base hits against the sacred cow of the Cleveland pitching staff in the first inning.

Greiner, of Baltimore, Shoots 150, Gains Final Round of U. S. Open; Cox, Brownell and Cunningham Fail

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

A Staff Correspondent.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 9.—An unthoughtful gallery and an unruly putter cost Al Houghton, Georgetown Prep pro, and Leo Walper, driving range owner, several previous strokes today at Spring Mill, but the two District professionals qualified for the final day's play in the forty-third National Open championship with 149 totals.

They are ten shots back of leader Sammy Snead, but the two veteran mentors have an eye on a share of the prize money and one of the first 30 places which will give them an automatic qualifying berth for the 1940 tournament. The first 30 and ties also figure in the money.

Wiffy Cox, spraying tee and second shots and with an erring putter, surprised by going from his initial round of 74 to 79, ten over par, and one stroke off the qualifying limit for the final 36 holes.

Brownell Starts Well

Bobby Brownell, Manor amateur, started and finished well, but had a terrible time getting the ball in the cup from 7 through 12 and posted a secondary 80 and a two-round total of 157, five shots too many. Frank Cunningham, Burning Tree pro, had another disastrous round, tacking an 81 to an opening 82 for 163, a disappointing showing.

The sixth qualifier from the Middle Atlantic sector at Congressional, Baltimore's Maryland and Middle Atlantic champion Otto Greiner, made one of the finest comebacks of the entire field today, playing the last ten holes in ever par for a 73 and 150 total, a total that earns him a crack at the Amateur title. Marvin "Bud" Ward, West Coast Walker Cupper, leads the simon pure brigade with 142, but the next best is Edward Meisler, of Ohio, with 147. Greiner has a good crack at the second amateur prize.

Bad Break for All

Houghton, who topped the Washington quintet with a 73 yesterday, looked even better today for the first eight holes until a cruel break led to lots of trouble. He went over on the first hole, and after getting a great par on the third, matched the card through the eighth hole.

As Houghton was on his backswing on the ninth, a spectator trailing the Henry Picard-Craig Wood twosome just in front, ran across the tee and Houghton flubbed his drive in a trap, with a quick hook. That hook followed him until the seventeenth hole and he lost six shots to par, three by driving in traps and three by hitting the tough rough. After three-putting 17 he finished in par for the 76 and 149.

Walper was off to another sub-par start, dropping a 12-footer for a birdie on the first hole and then scrambling to pars on the second

Paul Derringer Faces Arrest In New York

PAUL DERRINGER

By the Associated Press

New York, June 9.—The arrest of Paul Derringer, Cincinnati Reds' pitcher, for alleged failure to pay a judgment of $8,170 was ordered today by Supmere Court Justice Ernest E. L. Hammer.

The judgment was obtained recently by Robert E. Condon, of Larchmont, N. Y., who claimed Derringer assaulted him in a Philadelphia hotel room in July, 1936.

Louis Scadron, Derringer's attorney, told the court that if an arrest order was issued against his client, Derringer could be entitled only "to what is commonly described as bail for the county limit."

"That would inflict a terrible punishment upon him, for the reason that he does not reside in the City of New York, and must, in the regular pursuit of his occupation, travel

Chick Evans' 23-Year-Old Record Tied

Tacks a 71 to His 68 Of First Day to Top Philadelphia Field; Horton Smith Second

By Bob Considine.

Philadelphia, June 9.—Sweet-swinging Sammy Snead came up from the depths of an abysmal four-putt green here today to retain his lead in the forty-third annual United States Open and tie a record that has lasted since 1916.

The brown-eyed slugger from White Sulphur Springs, who only a few years ago was a barefoot hillbilly caddy, shot a 71 over the heat-wavey Spring Mill course to up his 36-hole total to 139 shots. He had a 1 under par 68 yesterday when the grueling tournament opened.

As a result Snead paces a field of 66 who yesterday turned in scores of 152 or better into the final 36 holes of the championship grind. Among those who will go into the home stretch tomorrow morning are Leo Walper, Washington driving range pro, and Al Houghton, Georgetown Prep mentor. Wiffy Cox, pro at the Congressional Country Club of Washington, along with Johnny Goodman, former National amateur champion, and Johnny Farrell failed to make the grade today and will watch from the sidelines tomorrow.

His 139 biffs tied the record set by Chick Evans at Minnekada in 1916, for the first two rounds of the Open—a record that withstood the assaults of Jones, Hagen, Sarazen and all the golfing greats. Brilliant birdies on the 328-yard sixteenth and the 363-yard seventeenth wiped out the memory of his dismally erratic putting on the twelfth, and gave Snead a one-stroke lead at the tournament's halfway mark.

Guldahl Trailing

Five shots behind him trailed the tournament's odd-on favorite, big Ralph Guldahl, who experienced enough woe today to make him hurl down his ancient putter in high disgust when he missed putts, and appeal with mournfully outstretched arms to the hot heavens. Guldahl shot a 73, taking six shots on the par-4 eighth, and he would have had a 74 except for holing a miraculous 30-foot putt on the rolling eighteenth green. The bad round dropped the defending champion into a five-way tie for sixth place, linked with Vic Ghezzi, Olin Dutra, Henry Picard and Lloyd Mangrum.

One shot behind the pace-setting Snead, with 140, finished Horton Smith, whose golf has been so bad of late that he recently took a couple of lessons from Alex Morrison, veteran pro. Smith toured the mercilessly hot course here today in 68 brilliant knocks, the day's best round of golf, to put himself squarely in the tournament. It was his best showing in ten years of Opens.

Craig Wood Has a 141

A single shot back of second-place Smith was Craig Wood, the big blond buster from Mamaroneck, N. Y. A cigarette perpetually dangling from his lips, the hard-hitting Wood added a breezy 71 to yesterday's 70 for 141. He had only to shoot the last five holes in par to become the first man to tie Evans' old record, which Snead came along to equal. But Wood bogied the fourteenth and fifteenth and muffed his chance to take the lead.

Pampadoured Bud Ward, 24-year-old amateur from Spokane, Wash., peeled off a neat enough 73 when the sun was at its hottest. It gave him 142, for he had a 69 the first day, and it indicated that he was in no mood to blow up. This is his first open, but he is no competitive green pea. He won the Northwestern Open last week from top Coast pros by shooting a 66 on his final round. He must be rated the biggest

Miss Epe, Kitty's Rival Run Dead Heat at Charles Town

First Race Is Marred By Accident

Jockey Allagier Is Hurt and His Mount Destroyed After Spill During Sprint

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 9.—Another of those thrilling dead heats featured one of the hottest days of the meeting here. For the second time since the bangtails began banging in the mountain country, Mrs. G. Hutchins' Miss Epe was forced to take half a loaf. The veteran mare finished even-stephen with R. P. Gillette's Kitty's Rival, the judges and stewards going into conference over the picture without being able to separate the two. Third money in the field of seven went to Mrs. A. S. Bowman's Brainchild.

By a freak of the mutuels, Miss Epe paid $2.80 in win, place and show positions. Kitty's Rival paid $9.60 to win, $5.80 to place and $4 to show. The winning pair were clocked in 1:20 2-5 for the 6½ furlongs over a lightning fast track.

Miss Epe undoubtedly was best in the race, but Jockey Sammy Palumbo was forced to take up on her twice due to being in close quarters. He finally got her clear on the inside in the stretch and made up all but an inch of taking the purse. Kitty's Rival quoted at 15-1 on the board, was rushed to the front and stayed there in all but the final wiggle.

Miss Epe, in her busy campaign, has not won a single race. She was beaten a nose, then a head and ran a dead heat on May 26 with James Pal.

An accident marked the first race. Apprentice Jockey Allagier suffered a broken foot and numerous cuts when J. E. Hughes' Her Odds, favorite in th esprint, fell and broke her leg. Allagier was rushed to the Charles Town hospital. Her Odds was destroyed.

The sixth race resulted in a driving victory for Beaming Lady, in which the 3-year-old filly equaled the track record of 1:19 3-5 for 6½ furlongs.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GAY PRANK, $13.40, $7.40, $5.00; FAMA'S FAY, $13.40, $7.80; KIN MAG, $7.00.

GAY PRANK, three rider and broke away to run away a mile, broke well and held sway throughout under strong handling. FAMA'S FAY was closest to pace from start, but was held safe. KIN MAG went evenly. LONG PASS had early speed. GRAND WALTZ closed some ground. CAMOLA had no chance with bad start. HER ODDS, off poorly, fell and broke her leg.

SECOND RACE—About 4½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:10½. Off 3:11½. Winner, J. W. Etheridge's ch. g. (4), by Victorian—Great Gossip. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 0:50 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NOTORIETY, $10.20, $8.20, $4.20; COUNTERMARCH, $6.00, $3.80; TRIVET, $6.60.

NOTORIETY, first away, opened a good lead and was kept to stout drive throughout. COUNTERMARCH raced greenly and showed good effort. TRIVET went evenly. LANDSMAN closed gamely from slow beginning. MISS CHICRO could not keep up. CALAMEGA fell after finish.

THIRD RACE—About 7 furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:35. Off 3:38. Winner, Miss B. Faulconer's b. f. (3), by Flagpole—Junetta. Trained by E. H. Gaines. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:27 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—FLAG ETTA, $4.40, $3.60, $3.00; GESTURE, $5.80, $3.60; SAIL BY, $3.00.

FLAG ETTA, steadied along close to HAPPY MIRACLE'S pace, took command when placed to drive and drew out. GESTURE saved ground under good handling and closed gamely. SAIL BY weakened after moving up menacingly. HAPPY MIRACLE gained command at first turn, set good pace, but was not ridden out when caught. ASTER PRINCESS had no excuses.

Daily Double, Notoriety and Flag Etta, Paid $19.60.

FOURTH RACE—Charles Town course. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post 4:03½. Off 4:06½. Winner, Mrs. R. H. Clemson's b. g. (11), by Oceanic—Flying Flower. Trained by J. McPhillips. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:16 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ADRIATIC, $7.00, $3.80, $3.00; FRED ALMY, $4.60, $3.20; HURDY GURDY, $3.20.

ADRIATIC, first away, opened a long lead and was tiring badly at end. FRED ALMY, closest to pace from start, closed with good energy. HURDY GURDY had no excuses while under good handling. SCOLD showed good effort. FREE RIDE lacked early speed and closed full of run. ROCKMIN was through early.

FIFTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:30½. Off 4:32½. Winners, Mrs. G. Hutchin's ch. m. (5), by Sea Rock—London Charm. Trained by E. Brining; R. Gillette's br. m. (5), by Seth's Rival—Kitty Cheatham. Trained by owner. Value to winners, $180 each; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:20 2-5.

SUNDROPS	(Villalobo)	105	1	5	5½	5½	6½	7	33.50

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MISS EPE (dead heat), $2.80, $2.80, $2.80; KITTY'S RIVAL (dead heat), $9.60, $5.80, $4.00; BRAIN CHILD, $5.00.

KITTY'S RIVAL had speed to go to front at first turn, shook off repeated challenges of RUTH LERNER and was weakening at end. MISS EPE, probably best, was taken up when in close quarters approaching stretch and came gamely under drive in closing stages. BRAIN CHILD was keen forward factor, ridden out. TRIXIE LASS was off poorly and closed ground. SPOTLESS was badly outrun for three furlongs and rallied mildly. RUTH LERNER was taken up sharply when KITTY'S RIVAL swung in front of her approaching backstretch and tired. SUNDROPS had some early foot.

SIXTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $500. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:58½. Off 4:59½. Winner, H. M. Luttrell's br. f. (3), by Happy Time—Calla Lady. Trained by S. Luttrell. Value to winner, $350; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:19 3-5.

LADY'S FAVOR	(Garrett)	110	4	3	4½	4½	5*	6	1.60

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BEAMING LADY, $10.60, $4.80, $3.60; KAI MIN, $3.00, $2.60; VICTORY LIGHT, $6.00.

BEAMING LADY took command at once, drew out and was kept to hustling tactics to end. KAI MIN was off poorly, saved ground and came with good courage in closing run. VICTORY LIGHT was hampered as first turned and closed some ground in stretch run. TIME PIECE was forward factor to stretch and stopped. GOLDUN quit after forcing early pace. LADY'S FAVOR failed to rally.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:24½. Off 5:26. Winner, Miss L. Seay's b. m. (7), by Sea Rip—Daisy Finnegan. Trained by M. Johnson. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:46 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SEA FINN, $6.20, $3.60, $3.00; BELLTHORN, $5.40, $5.00; LAST SCAMP, $5.00.

SEA FINN, lacking early speed, came around horses boldly, cut over in front of BELLTHORN in stretch and drew clear under drive. BELLTHORN set pace under hustling tactics and was forced to be taken up when cut off by winner. LAST SCAMP allowed to settle into stride, improved position steadily after half and closed full of run. AUFOIN had speed in spots and can do better. SILVERY WAY was squeezed back on backstretch. GOLDEN KEY stopped. MISLED quit.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $500; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:50½. Off 5:52½. Winner, Mrs. R. E. Black's b. m. (8), by Big Blaze—Tokio. Trained by R. E. Black. Value to winner, $350; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:47 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CROSSING OVER, $39.60, $21.40, $9.40; MILRAY, $39.40, $16.20; HEART PLAY, $5.40.

CROSSING OVER alternated in setting and pressing pace with MILRAY, went into good lead approaching stretch and held sway thereafter. MILRAY was keen forward factor from start and held on gamely. HEART PLAY improved position steadily. NEVER IDOL closed with rush. WESTIGAL stopped. PETEE LAD quit. IRISH VOTE ran in dull fashion.

Lynch, Johnsen Upset Mitchell, McElvenny in Doubles

Top-Seeded Team Beaten By 6-3, 9-7

Howard and Farrin Also Reach Finals In City Net Tourney; Take Two Matches

By Jack Munhall.

The ravages of age and rust plus the surge of more youthful and better-conditioned rivals finally caught up with Dooly Mitchell and Ralph McElvenny yesterday and the defending doubles champions were eliminated from the City of Washington tournament in straight sets by Hugh Lynch and Davie Johnsen.

In a match that gripped a large crowd by its drama and fierce competition, especially in the second set, the fourth seeded combination of Lynch, 27-year-old Edgemoor Club star, and 19-year-old former Junior Champion Johnsen emerged victorious, 6—3, 9—7. It was the first doubles loss that anyone could remember for Mitchell and McElvenny.

By their victory Johnsen and Lynch qualified to meet Lieuts. Howard and Farrin, second seeded team, in the finals this afternoon. Howard and Farrin, the smooth-working Naval officers who have been playing together for 13 years, or since their college days at Annapolis, scored two triumphs yesterday.

In their quarter-final test they had little trouble with Tom Moorhead and Charlie Sturtevant and won, 6-1, 6-2, but taking the court soon afterward were pressed to the limit before turning back Allie Ritzenberg and Nathan Askin, Southern Conference titleholders from the University of Maryland. The scores were 6—3 and 12—10.

Came As a Shock

The defeat of the 30-year-old Mitchell and his partner who is two years his senior was not altogether unexpected but like the passing of the old Iron Horse, Lou Gehrig, it came as a shock to the crowd which had been saying "just wait a while, they'll get going" as the champs were outclassed in the first set.

They did get going, too, in that second thrilling set but their best was not good enough to beat the steady Lynch and the sensational Johnsen.

It was just as the exhausted Mitchell put it after the match, "you can't play five or six times all spring as Ralph and I have been doing and expect to beat a team like Johnsen and Lynch, who are out there practicing every day.

Game Is Ragged

Mitchell, formerly a Georgetown University star who has been campaigning locally since he was 14 years old, now teaches accountancy four nights a week and week-ends are his only chance for tennis. And the lack of steady play was noticeable in his game just as in McElvenny's. As a matter of fact, McElvenny was even more sluggish and uncertain and never was able to hold his service in either set.

This is not meant to lessen or in any way discredit the brilliant performance that carried Johnsen and Lynch to a surprising straight-set victory, for they worked with a better co-ordination and more smoothly than at any time since they paired for their first tournament last year.

Today's doubles final is scheduled for 4 o'clock. Before then, however, Farrin and Lynch and Johnsen have business to attend to in the singles semifinals. Lynch and Johnsen will be opposed in one match and Farrin meets Alphonso Smith in the second. Both are to start at 2:30.

The Farrin-Smith match will renew a rivalry begun in 1924 when Smith eliminated Farrin in the national boy's championships and then went on to win the title.

many. It was announced the German delegate, Dr. Karl Ritter von Halt, had received assurances from Hitler that Germany would be pleased to invite the Olympic committee to Garmish, scene of the 1936 winter games, and to provide necessary financial guarantees to see that the games were run in Olympic tradition.

Dispute Over Ski Program

The dispute between the I. O. C. and Swiss officials arose over the skiing program. In this part of the world skiing is the most important part of the winter games, but next year it has been reduced to the status of an exhibition because the I. O. C. refuses to allow skiing instructors to compete as amateurs.

St. Moritz officials originally accepted the winter games with the understanding that skiing would be reduced, but later advised the committee they wanted a full competitive ski program. Count Henri de Baillet Latour, I. O. C. president, yesterday cabled the Swiss committee to accept the program by noon or forfeit its rights. At 11:30 a. m. Switzerland refused to meet the committee's demands.

Senior Golf Won By Detroit Man

Rye, N. Y., June 9 (AP).—William A. Ryan, 57-year-old Detroit golfer, won the International Senior Individual Golf title today and Charles H. Jennings, 62, of Roaring Gap, N. C., captured the United States senior crown.

Ryan carded a 73, two over par, at the Blind Brook Club to take the international event by a single stroke from last year's winner, R. M. Gray, of Toronto. The two tied, however, for the George S. Lyon Memorial Trophy with net scores of 60. Ryan had a four handicap and gray five. It was decided to postpone their play-off for the cup until next year's international tournament at Toronto.

University Club's Golf Tourney Was Important—but So Was the Beer

Post Staff Photos.

Feature of the University Club's annual outing yesterday was the handicap golf tournament staged over Congressional's well-manicured hills. In the photo above, several of the club's outstanding members pore over score cards. They are (left to right) Godfrey L. Munter, former president of the D. C. Bar Association; J. Alan Maphis and Claude M. Houchins, secretary of the club. It was a blistering hot day, so the pleasure shown by the gentlemen at right can be understood. The sign speaks for itself. amateur threat the Open has had since Johnny Goodman won it six years ago.

Ward, who leans into his drives with alarming venom, was tied at 142 by quiet-mannered, graying Denny Shute, the mild pro who won the British Open in 1933 and for a time was called the greatest match player in the world. Taking plenty of time, Shute whacked his way around the baked layout in 72 biffs, three over par. He hit two trees but had the equanamity to make the best of it. A 9-foot putt for a birdie on the ninth helped him.

Little Hits Trouble

Lawson Little, whose 20-to-1 dropped after he shot his 69 the first day, ran into trouble at the start of his second round. His 39 for the first nine was five over par. On the back nine he calmed down considerably. He birdied the eleventh and the eighteenth to pull himself out of his woes and finished up with a 74 that gave him a total of 143.

With him at 143, in the late afternoon, were Jug McSpaden, Harry Cooper, Johnny Bulla and Frank Moore. A notch behind these came Henry Picard, the bookmakers' third choice to win the tournament. Playing sporadic golf he went over par on the fourth, then birdied the sixth. He strung together six 4s in a row along the backstretch, then took a snake-biting 6 on the eighteenth, after reaching the edge of the green in two socks.

Vic Ghezzi and Olin Dutra tied Hershey Henry with 144, and after them came a long list of pros and amateurs affected either by the frying heat or the mountainous peaks and valleys of the course. Back in the ruck were Gene Sarazen, Tommy Armour, Jimmy Hines, Billy Burke, Tony Manero and others of this ilk.

18 Holes of Hot Golf

Sam Byrd, former Yankee and Cincinnati Reds outfielder, was bracketed with Sarazen, Sam Parks and Paul Runyan with 146, but nonetheless he had strung together the hottest 18 holes anybody has played in the Open since Sarazen finished the 1932 Open with a 66. The unfortunate fact was that 24 hours separated Sam's hot-handedness. He had a 33 on the back nine yesterday and started out today by shooting a 33 on the first nine. But he cooled out in a hurry and took a 38 to finish up today, giving him a 71 to add to yesterday's 75.

Baxter, Clinstock To Meet Thursday

Laverne Baxter, current wrestling villain of the local ring, will make faces at Jim Clinstock again next Thursday night at Griffith Stadium. Baxter defeated Clinstock this week at Turner's Arena.

So chagrined was he over his defeat, Clinstock entered a plea for a return match with Laverne that touched Promoter Joe Turner's heart. So he is going to give Clinstock his big chance outdoors—unless rains also stage a return engagement and again force the match into the Arena.

Armour to Play In East Potomac Tourney Monday

By a Staff Correspondent.

Armour, Tony and Charles Penna, Jimmy Demaret, one of the leading money winners of the year, and Ben Hogan, winter tour sensation, will all play in the event with the Middle Atlantic mentors, Tommy Doerer, East Potomac manager, was promised here today. A number of Philadelphia pros, planning to make the trip, will be occupied with sectional P. G. A. qualifying rounds Monday at Lancaster.

Hufty's score is only 2 over that of Ralph Quinter, jr., who won last year's championship with a 300 for the 74 holes and who has only just begun his four rounds. The 11 entries, most of whom have concluded two rounds, will have to finish the four tomorrow.

Quinter appeared in the late afternoon at the Chevy Chase course and covered the 18 in 71, the lowest score turned in by any of the entrants so far. He shot a 78 on his first round Thursday, giving him a total of 149 at the half-way mark, two below the leading Hufty's halfway score of 151.

Interior Wins, 10-3, Over Maritime

Though each team had eight hits, Interior won the playoff of a postponed Departmental League game over Maritime Commission yesterday by the wide margin of 10 to 3. Seven Commission errors, against only two for the winners, settled the issue. The best any I. D. R. A. batter could account for was a single hit, while the Commissioners' Doberstein had a perfect day at bat, three for three. Joe Freschi had four misplays called against him.

and third, exploding from traps and dropping sizeable putts on each. He three-putted the fourth and was in trouble from tee to cup on five for a double-bogey six. He three-putted again on the ninth to go out in 37.

Putter Betrays Him

His mallet-head putter betrayed him again on 10 and 11, three-putting both. He dropped 12 and 7 foot putts on the back nine, as his second shots again caught traps, and then took six on the easy fifteenth, going from trap to trap, he birdied the last hole, his sixth of the two rounds. His putting for the day was nearly even, he dropped some good ones and three-putted four, but Leo figured he shouldn't three-putt, and blamed it on his putter.

Cox started seven over par for six holes, hitting everything wrong, and finished 2-4-4 for a 40. He still had a chance to qualify but was in water, traps and missed three birdie putts coming back for a 39 and too many.

Bobby Brownell's direction, touch and his game fell apart in the middle of his round and although he rallied nicely it was too late. He was only two over par for the first six and even for the last six but sandwiched in were six holes where he lost nine strokes to par.

Cunningham was the only one of the five to better his first day's score, but it was little better. The others went up and may be due for better things tomorrow.

Leo Walper drew Tom Creavy, former P. G. A. champion, as his partner for the final 36 holes, at 9:35 and 1:35, Eastern daylight saving time. While Houghton, who played his first rounds with Al Espinosa, of the famed Espinosa brothers, will play at 8:50 and 12:50 with one of another famous pro and amateur family, Jim Turnesa.

Otto Greiner, Baltimore amateur, and Eddie Oliver, Hornell, N. Y. pro, who played in several District tournaments last year, were partners the first two rounds and the luck of the draw paired them together again, a very unusual occurrence that any two players are partners through an entire 36-hole tournament.

Blind Bogey Tourney Ends in Four-way Tie

Pleasure bent members of the University Club, about 80 strong, made their annual march on Congressional Country Club yesterday and took over every department of the River road layout from the golf course down to the sandbox for kiddies. A blind bogey golf tournament, however, occupied most of the men with the result that par was the safest thing on the course during the day.

An 82, not quite as good as the 65 turned in by Sammy Snead at Congressional recently, won the low gross trophy for E. S. Grayvill, and the next best card was an 85, sheepishly handed to the scorer by D. S. Woodward.

In the bogey tourney, four players ended in a deadlock with 74. The low men were Charles Tenn, Arthur Shipe, G. E. Taggart and P. R. Jones.

Edward Backer was the tennis player who best survived the torrid sun and the volleys of his opponents. He whipped Roy Smith by an unannounced score for the singles award, and the combination of Gaylord Boyer and Charles Pledger took down the doubles trophy.

There were other sports for athletic minded University Clubbers, not the least of which was swimming. Then, too, there was a sign reading "free beer," backed up by a barrel and grinning barman. It wasn't exactly sport, but it was welcome on a hot day such as yesterday.

Treasury Nine And Pepco Win League Tilts

Gas Light Team, F. B. I. Beaten in Games on Ellipse Diamonds

Despite every effort to overcome the four-run lead Treasury took in the first inning, Washington Gas Light nine lost a Government League baseball game yesterday on the East Ellipse, 6 to 5. The Treasury men added single runs in the second and fourth, and withstood a Gas Light rally in the ninth, to win.

The other game in the Government League, between FBI and Pepco., went to the latter behind the three-hit hurling of Helman, 4 to 0. The only time FBI threatened a score was when Russell pounded his team's only extra base hit, a triple, in the fourth inning. A. Chumbris, former Maryland U. star, had a triple and single for the winners, and Tonker and Chaconas also contributed a pair of hits apiece.

What, Buy the Bees? Nobody Interested When Price Is Told

Boston, June 9 (AP).—Bob Quinn, president of the Boston Bees, said today three persons had approached officials of the National League club in the past two weeks concerning purchase of the team, but they appeared to lose interest "when money was mentioned."

The club president's statement came in response to reports that Boston men were negotiating for purchase of the team.

Quinn, who identified two of the three men only as "from out of town," said they apparently were "straw men" representing someone else whom they declined to identify.

Concerning reports that William Danforth, Boston financier and sportsman, was negotiating for purchase of the team, Quinn said he had not talked with Danforth "since the last World's Series," and that they did not discuss sale of the club at that time. Danforth could not be reached for comment.

Abrams-Brouillard Bout May Be Called Off

Chris Dundee Asks Fight Be Canceled

N. B. A. Threatens George's Suspension; Fishel Recognized As Manager Here

By Al Hailey

Plans for the ten-round fight between Washington's Georgie Abrams and Lou Brouillard, former world's champion welter and middle weight, struck a snag yesterd as Chris Dundee, Abrams' New York handler, asked that the match be called off.

Forcing Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn's blood pressure to a new high, Dundee, in a telephone conversation from New York, asked to be released from the fight, scheduled for June 19 in Griffith Stadium.

This request immediately brought on a threat of suspension of Abrams by the National Boxing Association when Ahearn notified Col. Heinie Miller, secretary of the District Boxing Commission, and an N. B. A. official, of the turn of events.

Miller Sends Telegram

Miller sent the following telegram to Dundee:

"Sid Fishel recognized as manager here. Contracts on file and publicity in paper. Failure to carry out contracts surely would result in suspension in N. B. A., and under working agreement with New York State."

Ahearn said that Dundee complained he never had signed a contract for the fight and that anyway Abrams is "not coming around at this stage of his training against southpaw sparring partners."

Although no one seems to know who "owns" Abrams, Goldie chided Dundee by pointing out that he is a booking agent for the Washington boy in New York and points north only.

Aroma of Ballyhoo

Fishel, who originally "owned" all of the Abram fighting machine, signed the contract for the Brouillard fight, Ahearn insisted. Whether Fishel controls any more than Georgie's left elbow and a couple of ribs or so was even more uncertain last night. Bo Bregman, local sportsman, is said to have a large dash of Abrams stock, and it was hinted about there may be other hidden investors.

There was a faint aroma of ballyhoo around, however, and the fight is likely to be staged as scheduled, in the opinion of several boxing observers.

Ahearn, adopting a moody expression, said that Dundee considers Brouillard a bit too tough for Abrams to handle at this time and that furthermore he has a $1,500 offer to box Teddy Yaroz, the week of June 19 in Pittsburgh. Abrams has been training in Stillman's gym in New York for the match with the southpaw Brouillard.

Nats Defeated In Ninth, 3 to 2

Feller walked Estalella with one out. Lewis slammed a single into right center field and Estalella raced to third on the blow. Wright walloped a hot smash through the box for a single, Estalella crossed the plate and Lewis galloped to third. Whereupon Cecil Travis ushered Lewis home on a long sacrifice fly to Heath in leftfield.

From that point, however, Feller was considerable pitcher. His fast ball was crackling and the Nats could make a hit only every fourth inning after the second. Two of the three hits he allowed from the first to the ninth were infield affairs.

Sammy West led off the second inning with a hit to Keltner but the Nats couldn't move him off first. George Case got the only other two hits surrendered by Feller, each time leading off the inning, but each time he made an ill fated attempt to steal second on the powerful arm of Rollie Hemsley.

It wasn't until the fifth inning that Chase surrendered a hit to the Indians, and when he did they translated it into their first run. Chase had walked Heath to open the inning and then moved Heath to second with a wild pitch over Early's head. Heath moved to third on Keltner's grounder to West and then Oscar Grimes swatted a two bagger against the right center wall to move Heath home.

There was a flurry of trouble for Chase in the seventh when he walked three hitters, the last purposely, with one out, but Cecil Travis delivered him from that situation by starting a double play on Hale's grounder.

But there was no escape for him in that ninth.

Harris Protests Umpire's Decision In Cleveland Tilt

Cleveland, June 9 (AP).—Manager Stanley Harris, of Washington said today he had protested to William Harridge, president of the American League, a decision of Umpire Harry Geisel on a play which led to a Cleveland victory over the Nationals yesterday.

Harris contended Jimmy Webb, tribe shortstop, ran 6 feet out of the base line in the sixth inning to avoid being tagged at third by Buddy Lewis. Webb went on to score the first of three unearned runs that inning which led Cleveland to a 7-5 victory

Giants Nose Bruins, 4 to 3, In 10 Innings

Passeau Is Goat of Defeat; Walks in the Winning Score

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 9.—Hero of a five-hit victory over the Giants two days ago, Claude Passeau twice forced in runs with walks today to become the goat of New York's 4-to-3, ten-inning decision over the Chicago Cubs.

In the overtime the Giants loaded the sacks on a single, an error and an intentional pass before the former Phil walked Pinch-hitter Bob Seeds for the winning run.

In the eighth inning, after Passeau relieved Larry French, he walked Pinch-hitter James O'Dea for the tying run after one runner had scored on an infield out and an intentional pass again filled the bases.

French held the Giants scoreless until Lou Chiozza homered in the seventh but was hustled out when he weakened in the eighth.

Man of the Month

(Following each game by The Washington Club, Walter Johnson distributes among the Nats ten points of merit, based on their performances for the day. At the end of each month, the Washington player boasting the greatest number of points is designated as the Nats' "Man of the Month" and receives a trophy from The Washington Post.)

By Walter Johnson.

(WJSV-General Mills Broadcaster.)

Ken Chase was a hero in defeat for the Nats yesterday and to him goes a bulk of the latest award of points in the Man of the Month Contest. To Chase, six points, because he pitched four-hit ball against the Indians and was beaten in the ninth only because of an error and a pair of cheap hits. To George Case, one point, because he made two of the Nats' five hits off Bob Feller. To Buddy Lewis, one point, because he drove in a run with a hit. To Taft Wright, one point, because his first inning hit drove in a Washington run. To Cecil Travis, one point, because he drove in a run and started an important double play in the seventh inning. Bees Defeat Pirates, 4 to 1, In 96 Minutes

By the Associated Press.

Boston, June 9.—The Pirates were held to three hits again today when the Bees sped to a 4-1 victory behind Barnacle Bill Posedel in 96 minutes flat.

While starting from where they leftoff yesterday with Lou Fette, the Bees assured Posedel his fifth triumph of the season by greeting Bob Klinger for three singles, a pass and three runs in the first inning. Two hits and Posedel's sacrifice fly accounted for the other Boston tally in the seventh.

Condon's attorney, Reginald Field, said the sheriff had been unable to levy execution or find any property of Derringer's in New York. He explained the law permitted a plaintiff to move for "body execution," or arrest, in certain cases where a judgment is not paid and no property in the State is found.

In ordering Derringer's arrest, Justice Hammer asserted:

"An assaultive athlete, through the very physical condition which enables him to gain place in competition is a potential menace to law-abiding persons.

"The fact that defendant is a professional ball player in a major league, attached to a team in another State, and that his services are important at home and traveling, and of interest to the baseball public, is no reason to deprive plaintiff of a remedy to coerce payment to which he appears entitled. The situation emphasizes the desirability for all athletics to follow the example of the great majority of their highly respected and decent living colleagues whose interests are jeopardized by any breach of the peace or unlawful or untoward act."

Dodgers Beat Cardinals, 7-4; Climb to Third

Brooklyn Rallies to Win in Seventh; Lon Warneke Is Routed

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, June 9.—Snatching a free-hitting game from the second-place St. Louis Cardinals, 7 to 4, the Brooklyn Dodgers made the switch from fifth to third place in the National League in one jump today.

The Dodgers rallied four runs in the seventh to come from behind to victory. The winning cluster came on four singles and Ernie Koy's double off Curt Davis, third of four hurlers used by the Cards.

Lon Warneke started and survived a two-run jab in the second when Babe Phelps and Koy doubled and Manager Leo Durocher singled. But he was replaced by Bob Bowman in the sixth after Brooklyn tied the score with a run on a walk, a wild pitch and a single. Paul Dean finished.

The Dodgers used three pitchers with Ira Hutchinson getting credit for the victory on one inning of work. He replaced Vito Tamulis in the seventh and was removed for a pinchhitter in the same frame.

The Cardinals opened the scoring in the first with a run on Stu Martin's triple and Ducky Medwick's single. They took the lead again in the fourth with two tallies on two infield hits, a sacrifice and Jimmy Brown's single to center and went in front again in the seventh when Brown doubled and scored on Medwick's sacrifice fly after a bunt and a walk had filled the bases.

Riggs Wins First Round of French Hard Court Play

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 9.—Bobby Riggs, America's No. 1 amateur tennis player from Chicago, won his first round match in the French hard courts championships today with a 6—4, 8—10, 6—4, 6—4 victory over Roland Journu, of France.

Although he dropped a set, Riggs never was in any danger from the Bordeaux business man, who ranks No. 9 in France. The American contented himself largely with trying his full repertoire of strokes on the center court of the Roland Garros Stadium.

Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Brookline, Mass., won her first round by default from Mlle. M. Inglebert, of France. Jadwiga Jedrzejowska, Polish ace, and favored to win the women's singles, had no trouble eliminating Jacqueline Goldschmidt, of France, 6—2, 6—1.

Bill Robertson, wealthy Californian, was the first of the Americans to be eliminated. He lost to Paul Feret, Fernch veteran, 7—9, 6—2, 6—2, 6—3.

Tigers Bury A's Under 17 Hits, 3 Homers

Win, 14-4, as Greenberg, Fox, McCosky Lead Attack Behind Benton

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 9.—Slamming out 17 hits—including three home runs, one with the bases full—the Detroit Tigers whipped the Philadelphia Athletics, 14 to 4, today to take the series two games to one. The A's committed five errors.

Pete Fox's first home run of the year scored four runs in the second inning to give Detroit a 5-1 lead. Hank Greenberg hit his thirteenth homer in the sixth with two men on base, and Barney McCosky hit his second homer of the year with two on base in the seventh inning. Sam Chapman, of the A's, hit a circuit blow in the fourth.

Alton Benton went the distance for Detroit, turning back his former Philadelphia teammates with eight hits and fanning seven.

Bolivia Ends Private Ore Purchases

Feared Decree Means Expropriation of Tin Industry

By the United Press.

La Paz, Bolivia, June 9.—President German Busch, in a drastic move feared in tin quarters as a first step toward possible expropriation of the industry, today decreed seizure of all foreign exchange obtained from mineral exports, nationalization of the Mining Bank and ore purchases, and ordered private purchasers of mineral ores out of business.

The decree stipulated that all mine operators, including such large groups as the Patino Mines and Enterprises Consolidated, Inc., Mauricio Hochschild and the Company Generale de Mines Aramayo, must deliver to the Bolivian Central Bank their entire foreign exchange receipts from exports.

The firms will be given Bolivian currency in exchange at a rate set by the bank.

To Be Nationalized

The Mining Bank, heretofore privately controlled, will be nationalized and its capital increased to 50,000,000 Bolivianos ($1,875,000). The bank will be the sole purchaser of mineral ores under the new law and private purchasing firms were given four months to wind up their business.

The Central Bank will utilize the foreign exchange delivered to it to meet a wide range of government expenses.

The bank also will make available to the companies sufficient exchange to cover interest payments on bond issues and dividends up to a maximum of 5 per cent.

Any direct or indirect attempts to circumvent the law through "passive resistence," such as "sabotage, lockouts or working restrictions" that hampers the normal operation of the mines will be considered high treason and the administrators, managers or counselors will be punished without trial.

It was inferred that if any companies feel themselves unable to operate under the new law and decide to close down, the mines may be taken over by the government, which would exploit them for the benefit of the state.

If any mining company should liquidate its business, the decree provides that all existing reserves be invested in Bolivian industries.

Officials Here Surprised

By the United Press.

State Department officials yesterday expressed surprise at the decrees of President German Busch of Bolivia establishing severe restrictions on foreign exchange and disposition of minerals.

The move occasioned unofficial comment that it was not in harmony with proposals formally submitted to the State Department this week by Bolivian Minister Luis Fernando Guachalla, who suggested that this country send a delegation of geological experts to make a survey of Bolivia's mineral resources.

Bituminous Production

The national Coal Association estimates bituminous coal production in the United States for the week ended June 3 as approximately 5,600,000 net tons. Production for the corresponding week: 1938, 4,691,000 tons; 1937 6,596,000 tons. Percentage of change: 1938, increase 19.4 per cent; 1937, decrease 15.1 per cent.

Local Trade June 1 is 5% Below Normal

But General Gains in 147 Areas Since May Are Noted by Survey

New York, June 9.—Business conditions in Washington as of June 1 stood at 5 per cent below normal, a decrease of 1 per cent from the standing of May 1 of this year, according to the monthly survey of 147 trading areas of the United States conducted by the business survey department of Brooke, Smith, French & Dorrance, Inc., New York and Detroit national advertising concern. On June 1, 1938, the city's business index stood at 7 per cent below normal.

"During May, for the first time in five months, advances in business activity outnumbered declines among the 147 marketing areas," the report states, "and by a wide margin. Improvement was shown in 116 areas. Only 19 areas declined and 12 remained without change."

Greatest Gains

The greatest May gains were registered in the following areas: Aberdeen, Camden, Cedar Rapids, Charlotte, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Davenport, Denver, Duluth, Fort Wayne, Grand Forks, Hartford, Joplin, Kansas City, Lincoln, Little Rock, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New Orleans, New Lork City, Omaha, Peoria, Philadelphia, Portland, Me., Poughkeepsie, Pueblo, Salt Lake City, Savannah, Scranton, Sioux City, St. Joseph, Toledo, Topeka, Wilkes-Barre and Williamsport.

The following areas were closest to normal in May: Albuquerque, Atlanta, Austin, Bakersfield, Cheyenne, Dallas, El Paso, Houston, Indianapolis, Jacksonville, Little Rock, Miami, Mobile, Phoenix, Portland, Ore., Richmond, Terre Haute, Washington, D. C., an d Winston-Salem.

Oil Brings Luck To 'Mike & Ike,' 133-Mile Railway

St. Louis, June 9 (AP).—Illinois oil development has brought prosperity to "Mike & Ike," which is the Missouri-Illinois Railroad, an unpretentious part of the Missouri Pacific lines.

Humblest of the Mopac's branches, it carried uncertain amounts of coal, sand, gravel and agricultural products in battered cars operating over 133 miles of weed-grown track. Like many a more important line, Mike & Ike's annual statement was written in red ink. In the first four months of 1938, there was a deficit of $32,096.

But last July, tank cars began making their appearance in large numbers on Mike & Ike's principal line between Salem, Ill., and Ste. Genevieve, Mo. Mike & Ike's traffic doubled.

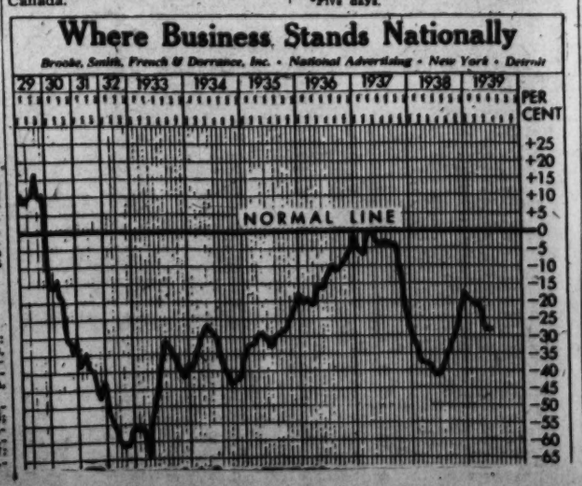
Since the middle of last year, 14,432 cars of crude oil and 1,915 cars of refined oil have been shipped from Salem and Centralia, Ill. In the first four months of 1939, operating figures showed a net income of $104,698.

Operating profits of the Mike & Ike, however, are but a part of its good fortune. In its yards and along its right-of-way at Salem and Centralia it has some 20 producing wells of its own.

Gold Imports Drop To $27,919,957

Gold imports dropped off in the week ended June 2 to $27,919,957, the lowest amount since th first week of February. The shipments compared with $86,385,350 in the preceding week and as much as $224,883,752 in some of the weeks immediately following the German seizure of Czecho-Slovakia.

The drop was particularly noticeable in shipments from England, which amounted to only $8,520,225. English shipments have exceeded $100,000,000 in some recent weeks. Other shipments included $7,947,100 from the Netherlands, $3,080,389 from Belgium, $2,283,715 from Switzerland and $2,786,700 from Canada.



Wheat Prices Fall Expecting Larger Yield

Government Report Not Published Until After the Close

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 9.—Wheat prices at principal world markets declined about a cent a bushel today as a result of optimism over crop prospects in the North American spring wheat belt. Favorable cool weather prevailed in the Northwest.

Quotations here sagged as much as a cent at one time while Winnipeg prices showed a corresponding loss and Liverpool closed 1 to 1⅝ lower, with all contracts there at the lowest level of the season.

Official and unofficial reports from Canada attested to bright crop prospects in the prairie provinces while forecast of moderate temperatures and showers throughout most of the United States spring wheat belt added to trade bearishness. Prices here rallied fractionally from early lows of 74⅝ for July and 75 for September as some traders evened up accounts preparatory to release of the Government June crop report after the market closed.

Wheat finished ⅜-¾ lower than yesterday, July 74¾-⅞, September 75¼-½. Corn also was ⅜-¾ off, July 50⅝, September 52. Oats were ½ lower to ¼ higher. Rye ¾-1⅛ down and lard 3 to 5 higher:

Smaller Wheat Crops Forecast By Government

By the Associated Press.

The Agriculture Department forecast yesterday a winter wheat crop of 523,431,000 bushels, based on June 1 conditions, and a spring wheat crop of from 145,000,000 to 170,000,000 bushels on the prospective plantings reported in March.

Winter wheat production was forecast a month ago at 543,928,000 bushels, last year's crop was 686,637,000 and the average production in the ten years, 1928-37, was 560,160,000.

The indicated production of spring wheat, based on the prospective plantings, compares with 244,164,000 bushels produced last year, 189,852,000 in 1937 and 206,494,000 the average for the ten years, 1927-1936.

The acre yield of winter wheat, indicated from June 1 conditions, is 13.4 bushels, compared with 13.8 a year ago and 14.5, the ten-year average, and of rye, 8.5 bushels, compared with 13.8 and 11.1.

The June 1 condition of other crops, and their condition a year ago, was reported as follows: All spring wheat, 71 per cent of a normal, compared with 87 a year ago; durum wheat, 69 and 88; other spring wheat 71 and 87; oats, 72 and 87; barley, 72 and 87; hay (all), 73 and 84; pasture, 73 and 85; pastures, 73 and 85; apples, 69 and 55; peaches, 71 and 59; pears, 64 and 67.

Cotton Futures Work Higher in Narrow Range

New York, June 9 (AP).—Cotton futures swung erratically today as the market proved sensitive to small orders on both sides. With the exception of July, which ended 1 point off, the final range was unchanged to up 6.

Despite the bullish factors, brokers said, of smaller new crop forecasts and a lively turnover in textiles, some holders of contracts clines at Liverpool. The drop there seemed worried by the sharp deflected nervousness over possibility of an export subsidy plan.

But on the whole, the market was a cautious affair, most traders looking to Washington for fresh price cues. Despite Secretary Wallace's firm stand for an export subsidy plan, traders were apparently still divided on outcome of the suggestion.

Worth Street reported that inquiry for cotton was well in excess of actual sales. Mill agents were still optimistic.

New York Clearing House

New York, June 9 (AP).—The weekly statement of the New York clearing house today showed. Total surplus and undivided profits unchanged at $918,777,800; total net demand deposits (average) decreased $65,228,000; time deposits (average) decreased $4,036,000; clearings week ended today, $3,277,367,923; clearings week ended June 2, *$2,881,969,141.

Rally Carries Prices to a New Current High Trading Volume Expands to 786,270 Corporate Bonds Gain, Treasury Issues Yield

New York, June 9.—Stocks opened firm and after a period of hesitation continued the upward march to a new current recovery high for the list as a whole. Volume expanded to 786,270 shares. In the bond section governments softened but corporate high grades were mostly firm. Shanghai dollars tumbled a bit further in foreign exchange dealings. Wheat lost ⅜ to ¾ cent on favorable weather reports. Cotton finished 8 points up to 1 off.

Although the sharpness of the advance in many of the popular trading favorites attracted a dribble of realizing in the last hour, most issues finished around or only fractionally under the day's best prices. The composite for the 100 key stocks gained half a point, a lag in the rails, oils and foods being more than offset by good rises in merchandising, motor, copper, utility and manufacturing descriptions. Kroger made a new top in the store division after opening unchanged at 26. The influence here was the Dun & Bradstreet report citing further gains in retail and wholesale trade during the last week. Attention was also focused on retail shares where benefit from World's Fair business is being realized or is expected.

Motor Car Output

Resumption of assemblies by Chrysler Corporation, following settlement of the Briggs strike, accounted for the sharp gain in motor car output to 65,265 units from 32,445 a week ago and 42,175 a year ago. Moreover, Chrysler has decided to advance production schedules, according to Ward's. The stock, active and firm throughout the session, closed with a gain of 1⅝. General Motors was more leisurely, its half-point markup reflecting trader caution because of the labor trouble developing at Flint and Saginaw plants. Effectiveness of the union call for a walkout cannot be judged until Monday, as plants concerned were on a five-day basis this week. Hupp was prominent in initial activity with a block of 1,300 shares at 1½, unchanged.

Steel common, which opened half a point lower at 48⅛, ended at 49½ for a gain of seven-eighth, while Bethlehem, less active, chalked up more than a point. An advance in the steel operating rate for Alabama to 63 per cent of capacity was the principal news item affecting this section. Rubbers were well supported, U. S. again capturing the honor of leading the list in activity. It climbed 1⅜. Goodyear also added more than a point.

Coppers Advance

Coppers benefited by the rise in metal sales for domestic delivery, tonnage changing hands during the last three days being substantial. Anaconda was up a half and Kennecott a full point. Other stocks which gained a point or more included Westinghouse, Sears Roebuck, Johns Manville, International Harvester, International Nickel, Telephone, American Smelting and American Canu.

In brokerage circles it was said that while the put and call market remains dull, more puts are available close to market levels than for some time. In case of some inactive issues, some puts are regarded as exceptionally close.

The further improvement in prices to the accompaniment of increased sales was, of course, cheering to the commission houses. It is pointed out that the invariable dullness of markets in periods of price reaction recently in itself denotes disinclination to liquidate well held long positions and possibly reflect rather widespread hope that business recovery will develop definitely later in the year.

Expectations of this sort are, in fact, receiving attention by forecasting agencies. "Business Week" feels that the foreign boom which stems principally from armament programs is bound to react favorably on American markets as such programs gain momentum. British industrial activity at present is far above the 1929 high and is expected to reach a new all-time peak before the end of the month or in the third quarter. British authorities, meanwhile, are making inquires in the United States and Canada for raw materials, and all Europe is interested in machinery. In addition, expectation of price rises in Europe due to a developing business boom, should spread to the great raw material producing nations.

Treasury Bonds Lower

In a quiet listed bond session, United States Treasury securities slipped today from their record highs. Other departments of the market were irregular, with the changes unimportant. But Treasury bonds drifted slowly downward during the formal trading and lost ground more rapidly in the late counter dealings. Concern about the inflationary aspects of the Administration deficiteering occasioned the recession, bond men asserted. Turnover amounted to $6,000,000.

Losses in long-term Treasury obligations ranged to ⅜ point in the regular dealings, while these declines were extended in late counter transactions. Some of the intermediate and short-dated issue, also were soft. Guaranteed bonds of the Farm and Home corporations drifted lower with the direct Treasury obligations. Best-grade utility, railroad and industrial bonds were idle, with fractional variations in either direction.

Medium-priced railroad bonds were quiet and mostly better, but a few issues followed a downward path. Borderline and default issues also were uncertain. Holding company bonds and industrial convertibles held to former levels. In the local traction group the interborough issues were hard hit, but B. M. T. 4½s improved. Communications bonds attracted buying, and a scattering of gains appeared in other groups.

Latin-American default bonds were uncertain in the foreign department, and Argentines were dull at former figures. German bonds led the European division of disregarded pledges slightly higher. Italian, Japanese and Polish bonds were neglected, and the high-grade issues of Scandinavian, Canadian and Australian origin were only fractionally changed.

5 Company Officers Indicted in Fraud

The Department of Justice and the Securities and Exchange Commission announced yesterday that the Federal grand jury for the Southern District of New York had indicted Harry C. Williams, until last December president of Foundation Plan, Inc.; Kirk C. Tuttle, former secretary of the company; James J. Connor, former vice president; Jerry Scott, former metropolitan manager; Benjamin Blumenthal, former State agent for Massachusetts, together with Foundation Plan, Inc., United Endowment Foundations, Inc., its predecessor, and Foundation Plan, Inc., a subsidiary, for conspiracy to violate the fraud and registration provisions of the securities act of 1933. The sealed indictment, returned during the May term, was opened in court yesterday.

The indictment alleges that the defendants conspired to defraud holders of thrift certificates of Foundation Plan, Inc., by means of "reloading" and "switching" into larger thrift plans, which resulted in the absorption of substantially all of the equity in the accounts of the thrift plan holders to meet the new and larger service fees and charges.

War Risk Rates On Shipping Cut Fifty Per Cent

New York, June 9 (AP).—War risk insurance rates on shipments to and from the United States were reduced drastically today by the local war risk committee representing major American shipping insurance firms.

The premiums, which are established on an intricate sliding scale of values, routes and distances of shipment, are cut from 33 1-3 to more than 50 per cent of the rates which have maintained, in various degrees, since the European crisis of last September.

A member of the committee commented, "Our action was taken in the belief that, if the prospect for world peace has not been assured, at least the chance of war in the near future has materially lessened of late."

British companies reduced their war risk rates yesterday and cable advice reported the Amsterdam war risk committee cut its premiums today, simultaneously with the American action.

Sinclair Co. Lifts Tank Wagon Gas ½c

New York, June 9 (AP).—Sinclair Refining Co. today announced that Wednesday, June 14, it will increase prices for tank wagon deliveries of all grades of gasoline one-half cent a gallon throughout the 42 States in which it operates.

"This increase is a step toward the correction of a situation that has been getting steadily worse for a long time," said H. F. Sinclair, chairman of the executive committee of Consolidated Oil Co., the parent comany. "In the last 18 months the gross revenue from a barrel of crude oil has declined more than 50 cents."

Argentine Notes Restricted to Autos

New York, June 9.—The economic and financial counselor of the Argentine Embassy in New York, C. Alonso Irigoyen, issued the following statement today:

"The finance minister of the Argentine Republic, Dr. Pedro Groppo, announces that the recent offer of Treasury notes to facilitate automotive imports from the United States will not be extended to any other kind of imported goods."

Banker Needs Liberal Mind, Atwood Says

Also Has to Get Out of A Rut and Learn How to Shift Financing Basis

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hot Springs, Va., June 9.—Albert W. Atwood, author and lecturer on finance and economics, told the twenty-first annual convention of the District of Columbia Bankers Association here today that a banker should not defend private property to the extent that he finds himself defending the abuses that sometimes go with it. He added:

"The banker's function is to be open minded and not ignorantly oppose all change. Above all, it is his function to avoid being particeps criminis in the excesses and abuses of speculation, whether in stocks, real estate or commodities.

"Let no one suppose that it does not take a liberal mind, a forward-looking mind to be a good banker. He has to get out of a rut, he has to learn how to shift the basis of financing, to change the form of security, in order to make a poor loan into a good loan. In the brief address which Calvin Coolidge made when he was sworn in as President of the Massachusetts Senate, he said: "Be as revolutionary as science, as reactionary as the multiplication table." Even to make money for his bank the banker needs to be open-minded, liberal and progressive in the best sense of those words.

Personal Qualities

"But the banker has another and equally important function. People will not patronize a bank if they think the officers are rash and impulsive. Therefore, the banker serves an enormously important function when he supplies his community with the personal qualities of sobriety, moderation, steadiness and stability.

"And if he is to furnish and possess these qualities he must be most alert to preserve and protect those essential principles of our constitutional form of government which have given this country such an amazingly long career of order, stability and continuity. The dual form of our Government, the reservation of many powers to the States, and also the separation of powers in the Federal Government—these are as valuable and precious to the banker, if he really wants to stay in business as the triple A quality of his bonds. For, as Chief Justice Hughes said not long ago: "While democracy must have its organization and controls its vital breath is individual liberty," and without that the banker will have to look for another job.

Must Promote Public Weal

"Then, too, the banker's function in any economy, no matter how fast it may seem to be changing, is to protect private property, promote legitimate private enterprise and stimulate savings. For in so doing he is not promoting monopoly or money power or Wall Street or the rule of the mythical "Sixty Families" what he is doing is promoting economic democracy and the public weal on the widest possible front. The average bank throughout the country, and this applies to all the banks in Washington, is the very essence, the very epitome of economic democracy.

Nation's Backbone

"Social reform may be necessary, vigorous measures to ameliorate poverty may be necessary, but you and I know that just as essential are the maintenance of such qualities as individual ability to save, prudence, forethought, thrift, enterprise and initiative. In case after case these qualities are what lay the foundation for the small, the average sized business, which constitutes the country's economic backbone.

"Finally the banker's function in a changing economy, as the trustee for depositors, savers, beneficiaries of trust funds and the like, is to avoid the extremes of optimism and pessimism. The banker must avoid either kind of contagion, like the plague. There is always ground for moderate and reasoned optimism. If any of you despair for the future, you have no right to be bankers. After all, the only qualities by which we live at all are faith, courage and loyalty to one's work, family, friends and the institutions with which we are connected."

R. E. Mortgage Corp. Re-elects Quinter President

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Real Estate Mortgage & Guaranty Corporation on Thursday the retiring board of directors was re-elected. The following officers for the coming year were elected by the board: L. E. Breuninger, chairman; Ralph D. Quinter, president; Wilmer F. Stickle, executive vice president and treasurer; Thomas Somerville 3d and Horace G. Smithy, vice presidents; Robert E. Hazell, secretary; Roy E. Bebermeyer, assistant secretary, and L. Harold Sothoron, general counsel.

A special meeting of stockholders will be held August 15 to vote on a proposed amendment to the charter authorizing the issuance of Class A common stock, par value $5, to be issued one share for ten to preferred stockholders, in consideration of the reduction of the cumulative dividend on the preferred stock from 8 per cent to 5 per cent, effective after December 31, 1939.

Dividends of 29 per cent have heretofore accumulated on the preferred stock, which will have to be paid, and the president said that the directors were of the opinion that the continued accumulation of dividends was affecting the stock's selling and loan value; that if the proposed amendment is adopted, the financial condition of the company will be improved, and the stock should have a market value nearer to what the directors believe its real value.

Week's Financing Largest in 2 Years

New York, June 9 (AP).—Public offerings of new securities during the week ended Thursday were the largest for any week in more than two years, Poor's Publishing Co. reported today.

The total, $222,957,760, represented 82 per cent new money and 84 per cent municipal financing. Other types of issues failed to reach exceptional levels. Swelling the municipal total for the week were $100,000,000 Commonwealth of Pennsylvania tax anticipation notes and $71,000,000 San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge bonds. The week was the largest since February 11, 1937.

Exchange Seat $68,000, Advance of $5,000

New York, June 9 (AP).—Arrangements were made today for the sale of a New York Stock Exchange seat at $68,000, up $5,000 from the previous sale.

The 1939 high price for a membership was $70,000, in March, while the year's low was $51,000 in April. The latter represented a 20-year low.

Idle Bank Funds Now 4.28 Billions

The Federal Reserve Board said yesterday that lendable excess reserves of the banks increased $80,000,000 to a total of $4,280,000,000 in the week ended June 7.

The increase resumed the record-breaking uptrend of idle bank money which was interrupted by a $80,000,000 decrease in the preceding week. The increase was due to Treasury purchases of gold and expenditures for other purposes.

Business Lift Forecast for Late Summer

Coal Peace, Steel Cuts, Federal Spending Are Cited as Factors

New York, June 9.—Several factors in the current business picture point to a gradual improvement in industry and trade, the force of which will begin to be felt a little later in the summer, the Standard Statistics Co. says today.

One of the most important of these influences is the Federal deficit spending under the pump-priming program authorized a year ago, which is now approaching its peak level. Whether those recurrent shots in the arm are sound is a highly debatable question but about their short-term influnce as a booster of public purchasing power there can be little disagreement.

The deficit spending continues to expand, and it is virtually assured that the rise will continue at least through July, thereafter holding at a high plateau, in all probability until early 1940.

It is probable that any important decline in net deficit spending will not be felt before 1940. To the extent that Government spending is a vital force in the business trend, there is no basis for expecting, therefore, any deflationary influence from this source over the remainder of 1939.

Peak in July

Present indications are that the actual peak of the PWA spending will be reached in July, when the total will reach about $180,000,000 monthly. Thereafter there will be some decline in PWA outlays, but this will not be sharp until next spring. Meantime, the USHA, Farm Benefit and National Defense outlays will probably more than offset any decline in PWA expenditures.

That business is near a turning point is indicated by a number of recent developments. The ending of the coal strike, plus price cutting in steel which brought heavy forward bookings, has enabled the steel industry to improve its operations sharply in the past fortnight. Commodity prices, which have held in a narrow zone for virtually a year, have displayed irregular strength recently under the stimulus of revived inflation prospects. Inventories have, moreover, been reduced substantially in many lines. Retail distributors' stocks, in particular, are now on a healthy basis.

Any broad cycle of business recovery will probably hinge upon a revival of the capital markets, which in turn is contingent upon a basic change in political philosophies in this country. But another short cycle of recovery, felt mainly by the consumer goods industries, is entirely possible over the intermediate future.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The British run an individual master's championship similar to the annual game for masters the American Contract Bridge League conducts here. Across the water "master" is just a name for the 25 top players selected to compete in the contest, while in this country it stands for a certain number of wins in the American Contract Bridge League tournaments.

The outstanding hand of the British master's event was a grand slam at either spades or no trump, which was bid and made in nearly every instance. It is shown in today's box. Terence Reese, one of the competitors, describes his encounter with the hand like this:

"I had the North cards and met the board at the end of the afternoon, in partnership with Naughton. South bid first and said two spades, playing Acol, and I bid three spades, the correct bid at this point. South, for some mysterious reason, bid only four spades; his hand is quite good enough for four clubs. Over four spades I bid five hearts and he bid six spades; this I carried to seven without much hesitation, for it was obvious that the contract would be on a finesse at worst.

"A diamond was opened, declarer put up the ace and after the ace, king of hearts failed to bring down the queen, made the thirteenth trick by playing West for the diamond king.

"So we bid and made seven spades and naturally I expected a fairly good score. But actually we were just average on the board. Two pairs bid seven no trump, played by North and made it on the lead of a red suit; one other pair bid and made seven spades, one bid six spades, and one, after a misunderstanding, the details of which have not been finally revealed, stopped in a cue-bid of four diamonds. So we go 2½ out of five for the grand slam.

"That two pairs should have bid seven no trump is odd, for there is no means of discovering in the bidding that both hands have a double-ton club and it must seem to North that a club ruff in his hand may well be the thirteenth trick.

"At two tables East opened the bidding with three diamonds, and in both cases the grand slam was still reached."

Bidding by Experts

According to the British Bridge World the correct "Acol" bidding for the hand would be:

East	South	West	North
Pass	2 ♠	Pass	3 ♠
Pass	4 ♣	Pass	4 NT
Pass	5 ♡	Pass	7 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

The five-heart bid is the Acol-King convention whereby the responder to a four-no-trump bid, holding two aces shows at the same time the king of an unbid suit. Since South holds the heart ace, he knows that partner is showing the other two aces and the heart king and as this makes the grand slam on a finesse at the worst and a laydown if North has not more than three red cards, the grand slam should be bid at match point scoring.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

STREAMLINED, pint-sized turkeys, developed through years of research by Agriculture Department poultry geneticists, will be given their preview at the Seventh World Poultry Congress in Cleveland next month. The fowls, a young tom and a young hen, will be prominently displayed in the Government exhibit.

The new model turkey, if the poultry men succeed, will be white, with a compact body, short legs, a long keel bone and plenty of breast meat.

"Get Ready to Write Your Congressman" is the slogan The Government Standard carried yesterday to thousands of A. F. G. E. subscribers.

H. R. 960, a bill to extend the merit system throughout the Federal service and classify positions in the field service, "may be brought up for a vote at any time now," says the Standard in an appeal for Government employes to make their views on the bill well known on the Hill.

The Lighthouse Service is going to celebrate its 150th birthday in August, reorganization or no. Plans are now going forward for the most appropriate use of the $2,500 celebration item approved by Congress and the President. By the time of the celebration, of course, the Lighthouse Service, which claims to be the oldest Government agency, will have been transferred from the Commerce Department to Coast Guard.

Secretary Ickes has designated the old Philadelphia Customhouse as a National Historic Site, to be administered by the National Park Service. The famous structure, begun in 1819 and completed five years later, is described as one of the most important examples of the so-called "Greek revival," which had such strong influence on architecture in the National Capital.

Bob Burns Says—

Mama used to tell us boys that we should always think three times before complimentin' a sensitive person. You never can tell when they're apt to take your compliment the wrong way. My brother was always so careful about compliments, he'd never take apples to his school teachers without first splittin' 'em open to see that the apples didn't have worms.

I'll never forget the time Uncle Fud went back to Bideville, his boyhood home. The minute he got off the bus, he bumped into Miss Birdie Coot, the old maid of the town. Miss Birdie said, "Well, well, if it ain't Fud, as I live and breathe! You've been gone so long, I'll just bet a cookie you don't remember me!"

Fud said, "Why, Miss Coot, how could I forget you? Why, you're one of the landmarks of the old town!"

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

The yearling is Jody, 12-year-old son of Penny and Ma Baxter, who live in the north Florida backwoods on an upper reach of the St. Johns River. Jody, coached by his father to observe the habits of the wild creatures, spends his time happily wandering in the woods and scrub whenever he can escape the home chores. Old Julia is Penny's hound, Caesar is his horse and the bulldog is named Rip. And here is just a sketch of the background in beginning one of the best books written in recent years—a grand characterization for summer reading.

Chapter IV

PENNY BAXTER lay awake beside the vast sleeping bulk of his wife. He was always wakeful on the full moon. He had often wondered whether, with the light so bright, men were not meant to go into their fields and labor. He would like to slip from his bed and perhaps cut down an oak for wood, or finish the hoeing that Jody had left undone.

"I reckon I'd ought to of crawled him about it," he thought.

In his day, he would have been thoroughly thrashed for slipping away and idling. His father would have sent him back to the spring, without his supper, to tear out the flutter-mill.

As he looked back over the years, he himself had had no boyhood. His own father had been a preacher, stern as the Old Testament God. The living had come, however, not from the Word, but from the small farm near Volusia, on which he had raised a large family. He had taught them to read and write and to know the Scriptures, but all of them, from the time they could toddle behind him down the corn rows, carrying the sack of seed, had toiled until their small bones ached and their growing fingers cramped. Rations had been short and hookworm abundant. Penny had grown to maturity no bigger than a boy. His feet were small, his shoulders narrow, his ribs and hips jointed together in a continuous fragile framework. He had stood among the Forresters one day, like an ash sapling among giant oaks.

Lem Forrester looked down at him and said, "Why, you leetle ol' penny-piece, you. You're good money, a'right, but hit jest don't come no smaller. Leetle ol' Penny Baxter——"

THE NAME HAD BEEN his only one ever since. When he voted, he signed himself "Ezra Ezekial Baxter," but when he paid his taxes, he was put down as "Penny Baxter" and made no protest. But he was a sound amalgam; sound as copper itself; and with something, too, of the copper's softness. He leaned backward in his honesty, so that he was often a temptation to storekeepers and mill owners and horse-traders. Storekeeper Boyles, at Volusia, as honest as he, had once given him a dollar too much in change. His horse being lame, Penny had walked the long miles back again to return it.

"The next time you came to trade would have done," Boyles said.

"I know," Penny answered him, "but 'twa'n't mine, and I wouldn't of wanted to die with it on me. Dead or alive, I only want what's mine."

The remark might have explained to those who puzzled at him his migration to the adjacent scrub. Folk who lived along the deep and placid river, alive with craft, with dugouts and scows, lumber rafts and freight and passenger vessels, sidewheel steamers that almost filled the stream in places, from bank to bank, had said that Penny Baxter was either a brave man or a crazy one to leave the common way of life and take his bride into the very heart of the wild Florida scrub, populous with bears and wolves and panthers. It had been understandable for the Forresters to go there, for the growing family of great burly quarrelsome males needed all the room in the county, and freedom from any hindrance. But who would hinder Penny Baxter?

IT WAS NOT HINDRANCE. But in the towns and villages, in farming sections where neighbors were not too far apart, men's minds and actions and property overlapped. There were intrusions on the individual spirit. There were friendliness and mutual help in time of trouble, true, but there were bickerings and watchfulness, one man suspicious of another. He had grown from under the sternness of his father into a world less direct, less honest, in its harshness, and therefore more disturbing.

He had perhaps been bruised too often. The peace of the vast aloof scrub had drawn him with the beneficence of its silence. Something in him was raw and tender. The touch of men was hurtful upon it, but the touch of the pines was healing. Making a living came harder there, distances were troublesome in the buying of supplies and the marketing of crops. But the clearing was peculiarly his own. The wild animals seemed less predatory to him than people he had known. The forays of bear and wolf and wild-cat and panther on stock were understandable, which was more than he could say of human cruelties.

In his thirties he had married a buxom girl, already twice his size, loaded her in an ox-cart along with the rudiments of housekeeping, and jogged with her to the clearing, where with his own hands he had reared a cabin. He had chosen his land as well as a man might choose in the brooding expanse of scrawny sand pines. He had bought of the Forresters, who lived a safe 4 miles away, high good land in the center of a pine island. The island was called by such a name, in an arid forest, because it was literally an island of long-leaf pines, lifted high, a landmark, in the rolling sea that was the scrub. There were other such islands scattered to the north and west, where some accident of soil or moisture produced patches of luxuriant growth; even of hammock, the richest growth of all. Live oaks were here and there; the red bay and the magnolia; wild cherry and sweet gum; hickory and holly.

A SCARCITY OF WATER was the only drawback to the location. The water level lay so deep that wells were priceless. Water for inhabitants of Baxters Island must come, until bricks and mortar were cheaper, from the great sink-hole on the western boundary of the hundred-acre tract. The sink-hole was a phenomenon common to the Florida limestone regions. Underground rivers ran through such sections. The bubbling springs that turned at once into creeks and runs were outbreaks of these. Sometimes a thin shell of surface soil caved in and a great cavern was revealed, with or without a flow of water. The sink-hole included with Penny Baxter's land contained, unfortunately, no flowing spring. But a pure filtered water seeped day and night through the high banks and formed a pool at the bottom. The Forresters had tried to sell Penny poor land in the scrub itself, but with cash to back him, he had insisted on the island.

He had said to them, "The scrub's a fitten place for the game to raise, and all the wild things. Foxes and deer and panthercats and rattlesnakes. I cain't raise young uns in a pure thicket."

Penny could hear him now, after all the years. He turned over in his bed, cautiously, not to awaken his wife. He had indeed planned boldly for sons and daughters, moving in prolific plenty among the long-leaf pines. The family had come. Ora Baxter was plainly built for child-bearing. But it had seemed as though his seed were as puny as himself.

"Or Lem put a mouth on me," he thought.
